HOLLIS PAGEANT WILL PORTRAY HARVARD PAST

Open-Air Drama in Seven Scenes to Recall Episodes in Academic

LOWELL ODE READING

Undergraduates Living in Hall and Former Occupants to Meet at Anniversary Dinner in Union, Prof. Wyman Presiding

Harvard University's commencement festivities open this afternoon with the pageant which celebrates the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the erection of Hollis hall. Several hundred former occupants of rooms in the famous old hall are the guests of the present undergraduate occupants.

The pageant, which was written by George E. Baker '87, professor of dramatic literature, consists of seven historic episodes. The various parts are interspersed with songs and music, representative of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. These are under the direction of Dr. A. T. Davidson, Jr., the university choir master. C. T. Rider '06 of Colorado Springs, Col., has written a special Hollis song for the occasion.

Nearly 100 undergraduates have been drilling under the direction of Professor Baker for today's event. Among them is Lionel de Jersey, Harvard '15, the young Englishman who is a direct descendant of John Harvard, founder of the university.

Different episodes of the pageant each represent some important phase in the history of Hollis hall from its inception in an English tavern down to the present day. As a sequence to the prologue, the first scene presents Sir Thomas Hollis, an English merchant and early benefactor of Harvard. This was in the period of about 1760. Events of the revolution, in which Hollis played a stirring part, are realistically depicted in the sixth episode by the reading of James Russell Lowell's "Commemoration Ode," which the author read on commencement day 1865 in the same quadrangle that today stages the pageant.
This reading is followed by the finale, which brings the story of Hollis up to the present.

After the performance, Hollis graduates and the present undergraduates resident there will meet at the anniversary dinner scheduled for 7 p. m. o'clock in the living room of the Harvard Union.

SUFFRAGE VICTORS ENTHUSIASTICALLY MET AT CHICAGO

CHICAGO—Suffrage "lobbyists" returning from the state capital today with a trainload of women who attended the suffrage celebration in Springfield last night were enthusiastically met in the Union station. Several hundred women, a delegation of male suffragists and the Illinois marine band welcomed the women home.

A parade formed at the station and with banners, "votes for women," "no vote, no tax" and other familiar mottoes of recent suffrage exhibition, moved to the Art Institute, where Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout, Mrs. Medill McCormick and other prominent suffragists addressed a mass meeting.

RECESS ORDERS IN HOUSE REJECTED

"Ought not to pass" is the report of the committee on rules on the order offered in the House this morning by Representative Mulvany of Fall River providing for the appointment of recess committees. One provided for a committee to investigate the methods of preventing tuberculosis, the other joined this subject with the proposed reorganization of the state board of health.

IPSWICH STRIKE IS PEACEFUL

IPSWICH, Mass.—All is quiet today in connection with the strike of the employees of the hosiery mills here. Evidence supporting the contention of the defense that Nicoletta Pandelopoulos, the mill operative who was slain during the disturbance Tuesday, was shot by a police officer, instead of being killed by a striker, as the government alleges, was given in the district court Thursday by John Baker, a shoe worker, at the trial of 10 strikers for disorder. The man declared he was in plain view of the spot where the woman was killed and saw an officer point a gun in her direction and shoot.

CONGRESSMEN OFF FOR VACATION

WASHINGTON—Representative Rob-

MOTORBOAT MEN SAY CRAFT ARE QUIET ENOUGH

While Muffler Association Is Active Against Exhaust Noise
Milton and Neponset Owners
Look Up Federal Laws

CRUSADE TO BEGIN

Although preparations for another campaign against motor boats owners who fail to comply fully with the state laws for efficient exhaust mufflers are being made by the Motor-Boat Muffling Association, some of the motor boat owners of Milton and Neponset are investigating at Washington the federal laws relative to the jurisdiction of the metropolitan police in rivers and harbors of the New England coast. Since the Neponset river is navigable for barges, the Milton and Neponset people believe that the metropolitan police have no authority there and claim that their craft are now sufficiently muffled to comply with the federal law.

Already the Motor Boat Muffling Association of which Ellerton James of Boston is president, and Stoughton Bell of Boston is secretary, treasurer and counsel has chartered the motor boat
Palm, which will be in charge of Capt.
John Grady of the state police. The vessel will cruise between Portsmouth and Rhode Island, entering every harbor and enforcing the state laws. Protection from thefts will also be given by the police boat to motor boats.

It is expected that Governor Foss will sign today the bill which has passed the Legislature appropriating $1500 for the charter of the boat for this season.
The muffling association is sending out to residents along the shore requests for additional financial support, about $5000 being required to maintain the boat and to support the cases against the offenders in court. The Palm is now off City Point, South Boston, ready to be placed in operation so soon as the Governor signs the bill.

PEONIES, PEAS, IRISES AND POPPIES, PRODIGAL IN BEAUTY, FILL HORTICULTURAL HALL

Peonies of every kind and color, like huge roses, fill the vases in the exhibit at Horticultural Hall today, the newest and finest variety being under the name the "Mrs. James Farquhar" peony in the display of R. and J. Farquhar.
Japanese peonies, many of them purple with large yellow centers, delicate pink, or shades of red immediately attract the eye upon entering the exhibition hall. These single varieties of peonies look like large lotus blossoms, the petals having the same waxy surface. In this display the double varieties are unusually large, and some of the red blooms are so dark in color that they are almost black.

A display of equal beauty is the exhibit of sweet peas shown by William Sim of Cliffdale, Mass. Sweet peas, known as the Spencer varieties of a flame-colored pink, are here shown for the first time. The blossoms are very large and often one stem contains as many as seven blossoms, the average being four.

The vases are arranged with 100 stems in each, there being 30 varieties in all.
The vines for these peas grow from eight to nine feet high and yield many thousands of fresh blossoms every day.
At one side of the hall a large exhibit of irises backed by tall jars containing a peculiar plant imported from

COMMITTEE ON MARCONI AFFAIR CLEARS BRITONS

Interim Report Says Transactions
Give No Ground for Charge Against Ministers, but Conservatives Differ

CRITICIZE ATTORNEY

LONDON—The interim report of the Marconi committee, issued yesterday, states that in the transactions there is no ground for a charge of corruption or unfaithfulness to public duty, or any reflection on the honor of the ministers concerned.
A draft report proposed by Lord
Robert Cecil supported by conservative members and contained in the minutes states that the apparent shrinking from a full disclosure of the ministers' transactions in American Marconis is responsible for the impression that possibly the whole truth is not known.
The attorney-general also, it states, acted with grave impropriety.

GOV. FOSS SAYS PROROGUING TIME STILL UNCERTAIN

Senate Adopts Order to Meet Wednesday at 10:30 A. M. and Again Friday

In the Senate today an order was adopted that when the Senate adjourns today it will be to meet at 10:30 a. m. on Wednesday and that when it adjourns on Wednesday it will be to meet at 10:30
a. m. Friday.

The president announced that the Governor had informed him that with the large number of bills before him, it was impossible for him to prorogue the Legislature today. The president said that it was probable there would be no business Wednesday.

The $8,000,000 tax bill is still in the hands of the committee on ways and means and it was stated this morning that it would not be ready to be reported before Friday.

On motion of Senator Hersey of Hingham, the rule was suspended to admit a petition that Quincy may raise the rate of interest on an issue of bonds from 4 per cent to 4 1/2 per cent; the matter was referred to the committee on municipal finance and sent to the House for concurrence.

The Senate took a recess subject to the call of the chair.

Today the Americans will attack in strength and their success seems certain.
Thirteen Americans are reported killed.

GOV. FOSS MAY RUN AGAIN SAY LEGISLATORS

Lawmakers Believe He Will Use Passage of Washburn and Trolley Merger Bills as Fourth Term Campaign Issue

TO OPPOSE RAILROADS

Politicians Declare Chief Executive Will Plead He Is Needed to Protect People Against Measures Passed Over Veto

Although Governor Foss declines to make a formal announcement to this effect, many of the legislators believe that he will use the passage of the western trolleys merger and the Washburn railroad bills as issues for a campaign for a fourth term. It is thought that he will ask to be returned to safeguard the public from proceedings he believes the railroads may take under the provisions of the two bills.

The experienced politicians declare that they fail to see how Mr. Foss can wage such a campaign on party lines as the three political parties had about an equal proportional share in the passage of the two bills over the executive veto.
Consequently, there has developed a firm belief in some quarters that the Governor may contest as an independent candidate.

Among those close to the Governor politically it is said that he has made no decision regarding a fourth term and will wait to see how the public takes the recent railroad legislation.

The jurisdiction given to the new public service commission in the Washburn bill is embodied in section two of this measure as follows:

The commission shall, so far as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this or any other act, have general supervision and regulation of, and jurisdiction and control over, the following services, when furnished or rendered for public use within the commonwealth, and all persons, firms, corporations, associations and joint stock associations or companies (hereinafter in this act collectively called common carriers and severally called a common carrier) furnishing or rendering any such service or services—

a. The transportation or carriage of persons or property, or both, between points within this commonwealth by railroads, street railways (hereinafter called railways), electric railroads or steamships, including express service and car service carried on upon or rendered in connection with such railroads, railways, electric railroads or steamships.

b. The operation of all conveniences, appliances, facilities or equipment utilized in connection with, or appertaining to, such transportation or carriage of persons or property or such express service or car service, by whomsoever owned or by whomsoever provided, whether the service be common carriage or merely in facilitation of common carriage.

c. The transmission of intelligence within this commonwealth by electricity, by means of telephone lines or telegraph lines or any other method or system of communication, including the operation of all conveniences, appliances, instrumentalities, or equipment utilized in connection therewith or appertaining thereto.

Under the terms of the bill the Governor appoints five members to the new commission to serve for terms varying from one to five years at salaries of $5000 a year, the chairman to receive $7500 a year. Not more than three commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party.

The decisions of the commission are mandatory, and have the same effect as if made by a court, only the supreme judicial court has the jurisdiction in equity to review, annul or modify the orders or rulings of the commission.

The new railroad commission will have the power to fix fares, to require any two railroad lines to build connecting lines if they be found necessary, may inquire into rates, charges, regulations, practices, equipment and service of any common carrier in the state.

WOMEN'S CITY CLUB OF BOSTON IS NAME OF NEW ORGANIZATION

"Women's City Club of Boston" was decided upon last evening as the name to be recommended by the organization committee to the permanent organization of the proposed new women's club, to be effected at a meeting called for June 20.
The organization committee met in the rooms of the Boston Art Club. It was reported that the desired number of 300 women had signified their wish to join the club as charter members and be present at the organization dinner to be held at the rooms of the Boston Art Club on June 20.

The constitution committee, of which Miss Josephine A. Bruntton is chairman, submitted a constitution which will be recommended to the permanent organization. The object of the proposed club is to establish a broad acquaintance among the women of the city through their common interest in civic and social welfare; to provide an open forum where matters of public importance may be discussed, and a club house in which activities may be carried on. Any woman who is interested in the welfare of the city and state is eligible to membership.

The entrance fee and annual membership dues are fixed at $10 each. It is arranged to have the management of the club placed in the hands of an executive committee of 30 members to be elected, after the first year, in groups of 10 to serve three years each. The first year they will be elected to serve one, two and three years.

LONDON—Following on the note from the Czar the great powers have repre-

this demobilization takes place, however, will doubtless depend mainly upon the decision made in the immediate future regarding the conquered territory.

RESCUES MADE AT PEARL ST. FIRE

Daniel Sennett, district fire chief, and the crew of engine 26 were rescued from the top floor of a burning building at 138 Pearl street this morning. Men from engines 25 and 39 and from ladder 13 opened their streams on that portion of the building, extinguishing the flames.

The loss is estimated at $15,000. The building is a five-story structure. The two top floors being occupied by the Machine Composition Company. J. R.
Watkins & Co., the Merton O. Hill box factory and the Western Newspaper Company occupy the remainder of the building.

JAPAN READY TO EXTEND TREATY FOR FIVE YEARS

WASHINGTON—Japan will extend the existing arbitration treaty with the United States for a period of five years, according to an announcement made by Secretary of State Bryan today.

The treaty provides for the arbitration of all points of dispute between the two nations, except those of vital interest or where national honor is involved.

The existing treaty expires on Aug.
27, and a convention for its renewal probably will be signed at an early date.

The American reply to the Japanese rejoinder in the California land law situation will be submitted to the cabinet Tuesday, Mr. Bryan announced.
Later in the day, it will be presented to Mr. Chinda, who will forward it to Tokyo.

WINIFREDIAN OFF WITH BIG CARGO

With 130 passengers and a good cargo, the Leyland line steamship Winifredian sailed from East Boston today for Liverpool. Her cargo included 150,000 bushels of wheat, 60,000 bushels of oats, 400 tons of provisions, 100 tons of lumber and 3000 head of cattle. This is the third shipment of cattle to leave Boston recently.

CELEBRATION OF KAISER'S JUBILEE BRINGING VISITORS

Berlin Is Decorated on a Splendid Scale and the Gala Performance at the Royal Opera Will Include, by Command, the Third Act of "Die Walkure"

at the royal opera will be on a less splendid scale than that in connection with the wedding festivities recently, but will nevertheless be a fine one, the Kaiser having given orders for the performance of the third act of "Die Walk-kure" with a representative cast.

The "Festspiele" at the opera and royal Schauspielhaus will exceed even those of Bayreuth, Munich and Wiesbaden in splendor, the greatest artists of the day being requisitioned from all parts. Not only Wagner's operas are to be given in a consecutive series with new scenery and effects, but Gluck's "Orpheus," "Die Hugenotten," "Fidelio" and other works are to be performed on the same lines. This is a new departure for Berlin and tickets at three times the usual price are eagerly being purchased.
That the Kaiser's relatives will all come for the jubilee is a matter of course.

BIG FLAG DAY PARADE SEEN BY NAVY HEAD

Josephus Daniels and Mayor
Fitzgerald Review Military,

RECEPTIONS MANY

Guest of City Is Orator on Common Where Thousands Gather to Witness Exercises Held in Celebration of Stars and Stripes

Nearly 15,000 representatives of military, naval and other organizations, with regular troops marching in platoon column, paraded from Arlington street today to Boston Common, where Josephus Daniels, secretary of the navy, addresses a large gathering as principal speaker in the flag day observations here. Before the parade Mr. Daniels had luncheon with the bankers of this city headed by Col. William A. Gaston at the Algonquin Club and was given a reception at the Boston Press Club.

The secretary of the navy arrived at the South station this morning and met Mrs. Daniels and his sons on board the gunboat Dolphin, which was anchored in the stream off the navy yard.

Secretary Daniels reviewed the parade with Mayor Fitzgerald. The line of march included 2500 sailors and marines from the battleships Georgia, Rhode Island, Virginia and New Jersey, now at the Charlestown navy yard; 1200 soldiers from Fts. Banks, Warren, Andrews and Strong; 500 Daughters of Veterans, the first women to march in a military parade in Boston, and 600 ELRs from the Boston and suburban lodges.

Under Maj. W. J. Casey, ninth regiment, M. V. M., as chief marshal, the marching columns consisted of: 1, chief marshal and staff; 2, Coast Artillery Corps and band; 3, marines and sailors from the navy yard, band of the U. S. S. New Jersey; 4, Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, band; 5,
Grand Army corps; 6, Spanish War
Veterans; 7, Daughters of Veterans; 8,
Sons of Veterans; 9, Fusilier Veterans Association; 10, Ninth Regiment Veteran Association; 11, First Regiment Veteran Association; 12, Lexington Minute Men, Teel's band; 13, National Lancers, M. V. M., escorting the secretary of the navy; 14, Boston lodge of Elks, First Regiment band; 15, Elks from suburban lodges. Each of the 15 divisions of the parade was preceded by a band.

During the parade car service was run on a temporary schedule by routes as near the regular lines as possible.

The women, marching in a military parade in this city for the first time, presented two distinct features of the parade, marching in the form of a cross and forming the letters "D. V."

Wearing white dresses with blue sashes they carried an immense silk flag that was presented to the city, raised to the top of a flagstaff, and then when the observance was over, lowered and preserved.

The parade formed at Arlington street and the route was along Beacon, Charles, Boylston, Tremont streets, Temple place,
Washington, School and Beacon streets, entering the Common at the Charles-street gate.

Chief Marshal Casey had on his staff
Lieut. George H. Nee, chief of staff; Col.
Edward L. Logan and officers of the ninth regiment, M. V. M.; Maj. Charles H. Smyth, first corps cadets; Capt. James
H. Smyth, coast artillery corps, M. V. M.;
Lieut. Richard M. Baker, M. V. M.; (retired); Lieut. James H. Connolly, M.
V. M. (retired).

An immense silk flag, carried in the parade by one of the 500 Daughters of Veterans who marched was flung from the pole on the Common following the addresses, marking the acceptance

Britain First on Persian Gulf France Fights Agitators

IS FOREMOST IN PERSIAN GULF

Checkmating of Russo-Belgian Secret Move Called Act of Sir Percy Cox, Whose Sepoys Also Ended Open Defiance

ARMS TRAFFIC STOPS

(Special to the Monitor)

KARACHI, India.—It is generally admitted that the British position in the Persian gulf today is paramount and unassailable. In the entire history of the Persian gulf there has never been a time when its affairs have loomed so large in international politics, or excited such world-wide interest.

It may be contended that British paramountcy was never in any danger, and that it was never less strongly entrenched than it is now. But the fact remains that not very many years have passed since influences were at work which had for their objective the undermining of British supremacy, and which were slowly but surely achieving success. These influences were working so insidiously and so secretly that it was well nigh impossible to grapple with them, and they were so astutely directed that they were likely to gain their end without giving any excuse for the slightest friction.

Ten or twelve years ago, although the broad lines of British policy were sufficiently well defined, the working out of that policy was somewhat hazy and apathetic, and important details were neglected, or not stringently insisted upon. Through the Belgian customs officials at the gulf ports, Russian influence was gradually encroaching, and stealthily securing its position at each step.

Russian Agents Active

Russian agents were known to be active from one end of the gulf to the other, negotiating the purchase of land and house property, and it was common talk in Bushire at the time, that the landlord of the Indo-European Telegraph buildings had been offered a monthly payment equal to about three times the rental paid by the department, in order to induce him to refuse the renewal of the lease, which was then about to expire.

Whether this story originated in fable or in fact, it is difficult to say, but it is very significant that when negotiations were opened for the renewal of the lease, the landlord was first of all reluctant to agree to a fresh lease, and then demanded a rental identical with that which rumor had credited as the Russian offer. Finally, under pressure, he was persuaded to accept an increase of 50 per cent.

In various ways Russian diplomacy at the gulf ports sought to thwart British aims, to lower British prestige and influence, and conversely to raise Russian prestige and establish Russian influence. Lord Curzon's visit to Bushire in December 1903, ended in a fiasco, as the result of an intrigue engineered by the Russian consul general for southern Persia, by which it was rendered impossible for the Viceroy to land on Persian soil. This incident revealed to Lord Curzon the urgent need of a strong, alert, and capable administrator at the head of affairs in the gulf, and, fortunately, the man for the situation was close at hand.

Man Needed Is Found

The political agent at Muscat, Maj. P. Z. Cox, had, during his four years incumbency in that appointment, raised British prestige in his particular sphere of control to high water mark. He had

U. S. AMBASSADOR CHEERED
AS HE LANDS AT LIVERPOOL

(Copyright by Angel, Liverpool)

Dr. Page, in center of group, arriving in England on White Star liner Baltic

(Special to the Monitor)

LIVERPOOL, England.—Dr. Page, the United States ambassador to the court of St. James, arrived at Liverpool recently from New York on board the White Star liner Baltic. Accompanying him were his son, Frank C. Page, Sir William Treloar, a former lord mayor of London, Sir William Dunn, and his private secretary, Mr. Fowler.

As the liner approached the landing stage, towed by the White Star tender, found relations with the Sultan strained and difficult, and by tact, firmness and sympathy had gained the confidence and esteem of the Sultan and had convinced that ruler of the friendly intentions of the British government. Lord Curzon had both official and personal knowledge of Major Cox's abilities, and recognized that he was the man to restore British prestige and straighten out tangled diplomacy in the gulf.

On May 5, 1904, Major Cox took over the office of British resident in the Persian gulf. Almost from that date a change came over the situation. With rare skill, patience, and firmness, he set to work to close every avenue through which British prestige had been, and might be, assailed. The Belgian director of customs at Bushire came into conflict with him at an early period of his rule, and was utterly routed, and from that moment Belgian influence and authority, and consequently Russian prestige, sank, and British authority was proved to be supreme.

The director of customs was a man who had an inflated opinion of his own importance and power as head of the customs, and backed, as he no doubt was, by Russian support, he made himself particularly obnoxious to the British. But his reign was short. With the idea, apparently, of proving his absolute power, he took the extraordinary and, as it turned out, fatal step of holding up British mail bags at the customs house in open defiance of a previous warning from the British resident.

Sepoys Release Mails

Major Cox lost no time in parleying, but forthwith sent a detachment of sepoy, and forcibly released the mails. At the same time he telegraphed urgent representations to the British minister at Teheran regarding the gravity of this case, and insisted on the immediate removal of the Belgian director. These representations had the desired effect, and the director was compelled to offer, first an official, and then a personal, apology to Major Cox, and was transferred to a minor post in the north. Two years later, when the directorship of the Bushire customs fell vacant, and there and gaily decorated, there was a scene of much enthusiasm and his excellency was welcomed with hearty cheers. As soon as the vessel was moored the ambassador was surrounded by a number of press men and in answer to their eager questions said: "You know I am the only man aboard prohibited from talking."

When asked as to what his attitude would be in the matter of the Panama canal, he replied: "The line my government instructs me to take up."

There was no other suitable individual to take up the post, the minister of customs at Teheran asked Major Cox's permission to send the offender back again, and Major Cox agreed to his return on a guarantee of good behavior.

The chiefs of the Arab coast under British protection, who had been very troublesome, were gradually brought well under control. Major Cox spared neither time nor trouble in adjusting their differences, advising and helping them in their difficulties, and generally leading them in the path in which they ought to go. Often in the middle of the summer he would go off on a tour down the Arab coast, settling disputes which had arisen, or bringing refractory chiefs to book. And in all his dealings with them, as indeed with everybody he came in contact with, he was scrupulously impartial, and thus won their complete confidence.

They knew that what he said he would do, was to all intents and purposes done, and that they could depend, with absolute certainty, on obtaining justice at his hands. The evil-doers, too, knew that they could not escape punishment if they were captured, and as he generally succeeded in catching them, they got more and more cautious.

Massacre Averted

In 1909 when the Nationalist disturbances were organized all over Persia, a firebrand by the name Syed Morteza, with 1000 Tangistanis, was sent to Bushire to stir up strife. Major Cox handled the situation with great skill and courage, and certainly averted a general massacre. For his invaluable services in this connection he was decorated with the Companionship of the Star of India, an honor which was thoroughly well earned. He was promoted to lieutenant-colonel in the ordinary course at the beginning of 1910. In December, 1911, he was summoned to Delhi Durbar, and had the honor of a special interview with the King. On this occasion he was decorated with the Knight Commandership of the Order of the Indian Empire (K. C. I. E.), a signal mark of the government's appreciation of his splendid work.

Perhaps one of his greatest achievements was his settlement of the arms

FRANCE TO RAISE EXISTING TAXES TO MEET NEED

(Special to the Monitor)

PARIS, France.—The minister of finance, Charles Dumont, has stated to the Budget committee that in order to balance the budgets of 1913 and 1914 it will be necessary to impose fresh taxation amounting to $208,000,000.

It was impossible to call for further sacrifices from landed interests, neither could direct contributions be increased since their conversion into income tax was being considered by the Senate. The government had therefore resolved to increase a number of taxes which had for a long time been providing abundant surpluses. Of these were the tax on alcohol and the special duty on absinthe.

The proposed increase on stamp duties would, M. Dumont estimated, bring in $39,820,000 of which $15,000,000 will proceed from an increase in the stamp duty on the issue of foreign shares from 2 to 3 per cent. A tax of 20 per cent will be levied on the net profits of coal mines over $1.50c. per ton. M. Dumont also referred to a new tax he intends imposing on the manufacture of electric lamps and a tax of 10 centimes per metre on cinematograph films.

DRY FARMING OF N. S. W. LANDS IS METHOD ADVISED

(Special to the Monitor)

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Aus.—Mr. Neilsen, who recently visited the United States of America to represent the government of New South Wales at the American Dry Farming Conference, has just submitted his report upon irrigation and dry farming to the Premier.

Mr. Neilsen recommends that the adoption of dry farming methods in districts with a rainfall of from 20 to 30 inches per annum will increase the wheat yield 35 per cent, whereas the increase will be considerably more in areas receiving under 20 inches. The average yield for the state would be doubled, while there should be no failure in the crops where the average annual rainfall is 10 inches. Mr. Neilsen points to the great Murray river and tributaries as the source of supply, and considers the river navigation quite a minor matter. The possibilities of good results from irrigation in New South Wales are excellent, while with dry farming the possibilities are vastly greater.

question with the Sultan of Muscat last year, by which the traffic in arms has been practically stifled. Under this arrangement all arms and ammunition arriving at Muscat are warehoused and issued only to bona fide purchasers on the production of a pass signed by the British political agent. And the destination for which the arms are intended must be declared.

It is due to Sir Percy Cox's personal friendship with the Sultan, and his intimate knowledge of the Sultan's character, as well as to his own untiring patience and admirable diplomacy, that the arrangement was successfully carried through. Up to the present it has proved most effective, to the great annoyance of the arms traders, who had been reaping enormous profits from the business.

Confidence Is Won

Like all truly great men, Sir Percy Cox is most modest and unassuming. His simplicity of character makes him averse to ostentation in any form, and he avoids diplomatic subtleties and deals frankly and openly with all who have any business with him. He inspires everybody with the greatest confidence, and his kindly sympathy is felt wherever he goes. No matter how humble the individual may be who requires his help, that help will never be refused.

Everybody who has the privilege of working with him knows that in him he possesses a genuine friend.

His entire staff are heart and soul with him in his work, and care not how much time they spend in the office, so long as they do the work in the most efficient manner. If they win his approval, they are satisfied. He himself is a shining example to them in devotion to duty, and never spares himself, nor consults his personal convenience, if there is any work to be done. He frequently works till 2 o'clock in the morning, and is up again at 6 o'clock, ready to begin afresh. His quiet rebuke, carrying with it a sense of power, is most effective with the intentional wrongdoer, but with those who err unwittingly, he is merciful and considerate.

ANTI-MILITARY RAIDS IN FRANCE
SHOW SECRETS

Government Declares War Upon Confederation Generale Du Travail Which Is Felt to Be Menace to Country in Crisis

RESULT IS AWAITED

(Special to the Monitor)

PARIS, France.—The raid on the headquarters of the Confederation Generale du Travail in the Rue Grange aux Belles, announced in a recent Monitor cable, was the first act in the war which has been declared by the French government on that organization.

Simultaneously searches were made at Bordeaux, Brest, Cherbourg, Dunkirk, Calais, Havre, Lille, Lorient, Marseilles, Reims, Sedan, Epinal, Belfort, Toul and at many other provincial towns in France. In nearly every case search was productive of the seizure of documents, giving the names of soldiers affiliated to the Sou du Soldat, and of other implicating papers.

Anti-militarism is not by any means a novelty in France, and in the numerous articles devoted to the present anti-militarist outbreaks the role of that organization during the Agadir incident is spoken of at length. The seriousness of its menace to the safety of the country in time of war has been recognized by numerous French governments, but their own position has been too insecure to enable them to deal effectively with the matter.

If this should also prove the case with the Barthou ministry, strong measures may be looked for from the man who, since the Elysée interview, is spoken of as the future premier.

With men such as Poincare and Clemenceau half measures need not be looked for, but it is a question whether, however rigid the measures, anti-militarism can be eradicated. For, with all its excesses, anti-militarism is directly derived from that revolt against war and its base accompaniments which the Liebknecht and other revelations have not been calculated to appease.

Socialists Join in Great Protest

(Special to the Monitor)

PARIS, France.—The prohibition by the government of the Socialist yearly gathering in memory of the Communards of 1871, led to the organization of a mass meeting of the party in the Pre St. Germain on the outskirts of Paris. The meeting was referred to in a Monitor cable as remarkable for its size and for its orderliness. It was also remarkable for the fact that it marked an occasion on which the forces of Syndicalism and Socialism joined hands.

From the 20 platforms speeches were delivered by Socialists and Syndicalists alike, advocating the doctrine of anti-militarism, and along with the red flag of Socialism waved the more somber emblem of revolution. At the close of the speeches, a resolution was unanimously passed against the three year's service bill and in condemnation of the Chauvinist and reactionary policy of the government.

The procession then reformed and marched back to the gates of Paris where revolutionary songs ceased, banners were furled, and the shouts of "Hou, hou, les trois ans" were hushed by the Socialist officials, whose special duty it was to guard against a conflict with the police. The number of persons attending the meeting is variously estimated from 200,000 to 500,000.

SPAIN AND ITALY ARE CONFERRING

(Special to the Monitor)

MADRID, Spain.—Though no statement has been issued with regard to the interview which the Italian ambassador has had with the minister for foreign affairs, it is known that the subject discussed was the commercial relations of Spain and Italy. On the day of the interview, a conference was held between the premier, the minister for foreign affairs, and the minister of war. The outcome of the conference is also not known.

WAGES RISE IN SCOTCH TOWNS

(Special to the Monitor)

EDINBURGH, Scotland.—In the building and allied trades in Edinburgh and Leith, negotiations between employers and employed for better working conditions have been under consideration for some time. New agreements have now been settled by the masters and the men in the joinery and mason trades. On June 1, carpenters and joiners will receive an advance in wages of 1/2d. per hour, making the wages (tenpence per hour). It was also decided that work should stop at 12 o'clock instead of 1 o'clock Saturdays. About 1400 men are affected by these changes.

(Special to the Monitor)

EDINBURGH, Scotland.—The conference held between the Navvies' and General Laborers' Union and the Edinburgh and Leith District Building Trades Association has resulted in working regulations being amended to include a 51-hour week; a standard rate of wages of sixpence per hour; overtime from 5 o'clock to 10 o'clock, time and a quarter, after 10 o'clock, double time; night shift, time and a quarter; and time and a quarter for working at the request of the employer on all recognized public holidays.

WOMEN IN INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ARGUE PROBLEMS

(Special to the Monitor)
VOORBURG, Holland—The International Council of Women met this year in the Hague. At the opening meeting the Burgomaster of the Hague, Dr. Van Karnebeek, heartily welcomed this congress, which is the first of many that will be held in the Hague this summer.

The prime minister, Mr. Heemskerck, was also present. One of the public meetings devoted to peace and arbitration was presided over by Mrs. May Wright Sewall (U. S. A.). Many prominent peace workers from different countries spoke and pointed out the duty of women to further the cause of peace and arbitration.

The next evening was devoted to considering "Some Problems of the Women's Movement," the Countess of Aberdeen presiding.

Dr. Gertrud Baeumer (Germany) was the first speaker, and said in part that the reason why many of the younger workers in the women's movement sometimes felt disillusioned was because they did not feel the enthusiasm which animated the older workers, this younger generation who had entered upon the labors of the older ones never having themselves known the limitations which formerly beset the position of women. She said that in the future women ought to give up trying to imitate men, and that they ought rather to develop all that specifically belongs to women in all fields of labor now open to them.

The Hon. Mrs. Franklin (England) read an address on "Education, Character and Life," in which she urged the necessity of study and reading as a preparation for social workers, to enable them to form a competent opinion on the different subjects commanding attention.

Mme. Avril de Sainte Croix (France) spoke about social purity. She said that everywhere mankind is awakening to the fact that the equality of the sexes cannot be attained as long as there is a different standard for the moral lives of men and women. Women were largely to blame that this idea had ever been accepted, and now it rested with women to educate mankind to higher ideals.

The Rev. Anna Shaw (U. S. A.) said that the great economic and social changes of the last century had made it necessary that women should take part in the government of the country; it was not only their right, but the right of the community, that they should be allowed to do so. In the countries and states where this is possible, women have accomplished much beneficial legislation. The speaker further said the time must come when we would no longer speak of the "women's movement," but of the "human movement," when men and women would work side by side for the benefit of humanity.

COOPERATIVE MILK PLAN IN HUNGARY SEEN BY AMERICANS

(Special to the Monitor)
VIENNA, Austria—The party of American agriculturists, which is touring Europe, arrived in Budapest, traveling via Vienna. In addition to social functions given in their honor, the guests have been afforded every opportunity of studying the questions for which their journey was undertaken. Lectures, in English, were given, in the hall of the Academy of Science in Budapest, by Count Frederick Hoyos Wenckheim, and others.

The American visitors showed great interest in the management of milk "Genossenschaften." These guilds have been organized in Austria-Hungary for some years. The "Genossenschaft" is formed by a number of peasant proprietors, or others, who have dairies. Each member contributes a sum of money according to his means, to purchase a central station, to which all the milk is taken. Apparatus for cooling the milk, and other expensive utensils for a good up-to-date dairy are purchased by the guild for the common use. A cart for conveying the milk to the station is also common property.

LITERATURE IS THEME DWELT ON BY LORD MORLEY

(Special to the Monitor)
LONDON—Replying to the toast of "Literature" at the annual dinner of the royal literary fund, held recently in the Savoy hotel, Lord Morley said there was a rough but sound division in the governing affairs of the world between the temporal and the spiritual, and literature had to do with both. It had certainly to do in an enormous degree with the spiritual power, and it had also a thousand affinities with the temporal power. It sprang from a common sense, a common feeling, a common sentiment of life and the ways of the world, and he, for his part cared little for literature except as it gave pleasure and as it contributed to the instruction and guidance of mankind in respect of life.

A good thing about mathematics was said to be the fact that there was no room in mathematics for dilettantism. He could not deny that in literature there was room, often abundantly filled, for dilettantism. In politics there was really none.

In England there had been one man who combined signal brilliance of airy imagination, of social savoir, of mockery of the follies and prejudices of man with the achievement of the position of being the decisive master of the policy of the realm—he meant Mr. Disraeli. A great friend of his, the most competent of critics, said: "Mockery, insight, spirit of humor, and so forth—is it not deplorable that the man who could write books of that kind should have flung them all overboard in order to become prime minister?"

Referring to the practice in France of naming battleships after literary men, Lord Morley said that eager as he was for the glorification of men of letters who were also capable of being men of affairs, he rather trembled to think of approaching his adventurous and open-minded friend the first lord of the admiralty with a list. The selection would be most invidious. The only name he could really think of was Carlyle, which would be a splendid name for a dreadnought.

Lord Morley said he was bound to agree with Lord Curzon that poverty was no stimulus to literature. In Murray's dictionary this sentence was fathered on him: "Literature is the most seductive, the most deceiving and the most dangerous of all professions." He still thought the description was sound.

but still he could not refrain from saying that anybody with a feeling that he had got something in him might do worse than embrace that profession, dangerous, precarious and deceiving as it was. There was this difference between literature and politics. In literature the salt of the whole thing was to be independent. In politics the essence was to be able to put one's mind into joint stock with other people's minds. If they could not do that they would be of very little use.

Macaulay had said that their literature was the brightest, the purest and the most durable of all the glories of their country which had exercised an influence wider than that of their commerce and mightier than that of their armies. That needed to be much emphasized at the present time, and on Empire days and such occasions it ought not to be forgotten.

MINISTRY LOSES NORWAY ELECTION

(Special to the Monitor)
CHRISTIANIA, Norway—The elections of representatives to the Folketing have resulted in 43 Liberals, 32 Social Democrats, 31 Radicals, and 7 Conservatives being elected. The representative for the Faroe islands has not yet been elected, but it is expected that he will be a Conservative. The Conservatives have lost six seats, the Liberals 13, while the Radicals have gained 11 and the Social Democrats 8 seats.

The present ministry, of which Klaus Berntsen is premier, has lost its majority, and the Radicals and Social Democrats combined will form a majority in the new Folketing. This will almost inevitably result in the resignation of the ministry, and the policy of the constitution will be in the hands of a Radical or a combined Radical and Social Democratic ministry.

PUBLISHERS IN BUDAPESTH
(Special correspondence of the Monitor).
VIENNA, Austria—An international publishers conference is to be held in Budapesth June 1 to 5, under the patronage of Archduke Joseph. Papers will be read on the necessity for fighting against undesirable literature, the foundation of a publisher's museum, on rights in cinematograph films and phonograph films, the reduction of postage on printed matter, national libraries and other subjects. An interesting proposal for keeping all books a uniform size will also be made. Mr. Heinemann of London will read a paper on publishers' rights and privileges.

FRANCE'S NAVY LEARNS VALUE OF HIGH SPEED

Slow "B" Fleet Escapes From "A" Blockading Squadron Which Is a Much Superior Force But Needing Cruisers

LESSON RECOGNIZED

(Special to the Monitor)
PARIS, France—During the first week of the French naval maneuvers, the "B" fleet, consisting of a French squadron, was in the port of Toulon, the latter being blockaded by an "A" fleet representing the enemy, which was of much superior force. The "B" fleet was under orders to proceed to Bizerta. In doing this it could find shelter at Ajaccio if followed, otherwise it had to proceed direct to the former port.

The "B" fleet, commanded by Vice-Admiral Marin-Darbel, consisted of four warships and three cruisers, and had attached to it two squadrons of destroyers and a squadron of hydroplanes. The "A" squadron, commanded by Vice-Admiral de Marolles, consisted of 11 warships and a squadron of destroyers for scouting purposes. The naval arbitrator was Vice-Admiral Boue de Lapeyere.

At a very early stage of the game the hydroplanes were rendered practically useless, and were consequently no longer a factor. "B" fleet succeeded in leaving the port of Toulon even in full moonlight on the same evening that the hostilities were opened. The destroyers of the "B" fleet were seen by those of the "A" fleet, but the very heavy sea that was running prevented them from coming into contact and "B" fleet escaped during the evening.

"A" fleet then entirely lost sight of "B" fleet for several days. The raising of the blockade of Toulon through the escape of the "B" fleet with its old, slow and feeble ships taught a forcible lesson to the French navy, namely, that the "A" fleet, consisting of Dantons and Patries, vessels of quite modern type with great superiority both in number, strength, and speed, was unable to command Toulon and that park of the Mediterranean to the west of its line of defense.

After leaving Toulon "B" fleet skirted the coast of Provence making for the port of Bizerta instead of taking a direct line. Had this fleet possessed ships of the same speed as the enemy it could have gone straight for Bizerta, without any risk of being overtaken. This, however, was impossible, for its average speed was not more than 15 knots, and it was consequently obliged to gain its destination by tactics rather than speed.

"A" fleet having completely lost sight of "B" fleet then proceeded to Bizerta to await the arrival of the latter, which arrived in the night when they fought a battle lasting some two hours. Vice-Admiral Boue de Lapeyere witnessed the battle from the Voltaire, and finally gave the order to cease firing.

The decision of the arbitrator was in favor of the "B" fleet, it being recognized that the "A" fleet lacked a sufficient number of fast cruisers to enable it to maintain the blockade. The general opinion is that the French fleet must be considered inefficient, and one of the naval authorities stated that it will remain so until it possesses vastly more speed in all branches of the service.

BESSEMER MEDAL IS PRESENTED TO ADOLPHE GREINER

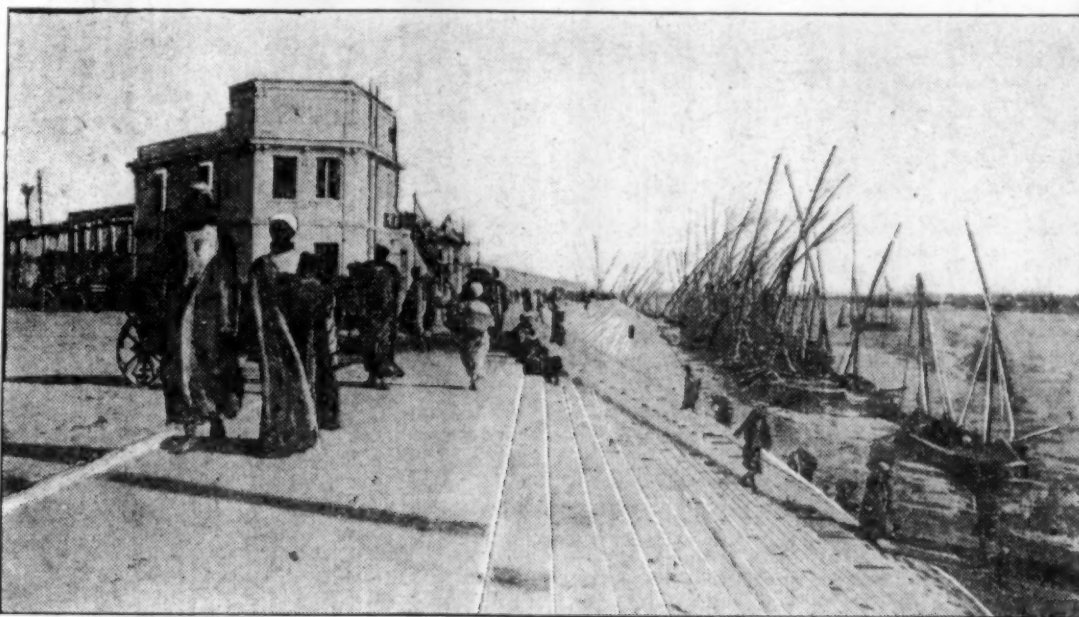

(Special to the Monitor)
LONDON—The forty-fourth annual meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute was held lately at the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, Storey's Gate, Arthur Cooper, president, occupied the chair.

The Bessemer medal was presented to Adolphe Greiner. In making the presentation the president said that Mr. Greiner was appointed chemical engineer of the steel works of Messrs. John Cockerill, Seraing, Belgium, in 1864. In 1887 he was appointed general director. He had been responsible for the introduction into Belgium iron and steel practice of the basic processes, and had been to the front in the utilization of blast furnace and coke oven gas. Numerous honors had been conferred upon him in his own and other countries, and in his capacity as president of the central committee of industrial labor he had rendered important services to the social welfare of Belgium.

In acknowledging the presentation, Mr. Greiner said that the works with which he was associated had rolled the first iron rail and built the first big locomotive on the continent, and had, by arrangement with Bessemer, been the first to produce steel by modern methods.

Benjamin Talbot then delivered a paper dealing with the production of sound steel by lateral compression of the ingot while its center is liquid. Mr. Talbot said he had successfully experimented with a process intended to produce a sound material for rails and other sections which would be free from hidden defects.

EMPIRE MATCH AT BISLEY SOON

(Special to the Monitor)
LONDON—The spring general meeting of the National Rifle Association was held recently at the Royal United Service Institution.

Lord Chelmsford, who presided, said that the Empire match, in which it was hoped a large number of teams from the overseas dominions would participate, would take place on July 11 and 12. The small bore meeting would be held from July 15 to 18.

The regulations for the Bisley meeting had been considerably condensed and the council hoped that such changes as they had considered it expedient to make would be found satisfactory. Unless expressly prohibited by the special conditions any position would be allowed, provided it was not unsuited to the firing point or dangerous. Whatever position was assumed by a competitor no part of the wrist or hand or rifle might touch the ground.

In the Alexandria, the Howard Wilkinson and the Corporation of London competitions competitors would fire singly, each competitor being allowed a limited time within which to complete his shooting. Within the time limit the competitor might fire such practice, convertible and counting shots as were allowed by the conditions of shooting. The time limit would be at distances not exceeding 600 yards 10 minutes if the number of counting shots were seven or 12 minutes if the number of counting shots were 10; at distances exceeding 600 yards 15 minutes if the number of counting shots were 10.

In all other individual competitions in which each shot was separately signalled the time allowed to a competitor within which to fire a shot would be in service rifle competitions at 600 yards and under 45 seconds and in all other competitions one minute from the time at which the target was clear. Adjustment or coloring of sights would not be allowed as a cause of delay.

THAMES BRIDGE OF IRON PLANNED

(Special to the Monitor)
LONDON—A special meeting of the Berkshire county council was held recently to consider the proposal to construct a new bridge over the Thames between Goring and Stratley. It was stated by the highways and bridges committee that they had been approached by the Stratley and Goring bridge commissioners to find out whether the taking over of the bridge by Berkshire and Oxfordshire would be considered.

Proposals put forward at a conference of the representatives of the two councils and the commissioners were still under consideration by the committee and nothing had been so far decided upon. The present wooden bridge is said to be unsafe and the proposal consists of the building of a concrete and iron bridge to carry modern traffic. The erection of such a bridge would completely spoil what is generally admitted to be one of the most beautiful reaches of the river.

WORLD'S ARMIES USE UP LEATHER AND RAISE COST

(Special to the Monitor)
CAIRO, Egypt—The new port of Attar el Naby, inaugurated but recently by Mohammed Said, the premier, and Lord Kitchener, is situated a short distance south of old Cairo on the east bank of the Nile. The works of the new port comprise a quay wall 800 meters in length and 67 grain stores of various dimensions and built of stone. The quay wall is made in steps, like the side of a dry dock, so as to be available for mooring and unloading boats at all levels of the river.

BULGARIA IS FIRM FOR TREATY RIGHT DECLARES MIR

(Special to the Monitor)

SOFIA, Bulgaria—Referring to the recent collisions between the troops of the allies in Macedonia, the ministerial Mir pointed out recently that after the cessation of the operations against the Turks Bulgaria was compelled to strengthen her forces in Macedonia, in order to check the serious encroachments designed to establish rights of prior occupation with a view to ulterior possession.

The Greek advance in the regions north and south of Salonika, the Mir continued, could not be justified, on the ground of resistance on the part of the Turks, who had already been driven out by the Bulgarians, but the aggressive movements have been continued. Railway communication has been impeded, and telegraph lines have been cut.

In these circumstances collisions became inevitable, and notwithstanding the scandal they have been advertised in the foreign press with exaggerated accounts of Bulgarian losses. These reports could not be concealed from the Bulgarian troops, whose irritation, increased by the delay in the peace negotiations, threatened seriously to endanger the relations between the allies. It is generally known in Sofia that the government intends most firmly to insist upon the execution of the Servo-Bulgarian treaty, and the general opinion prevails that there is little hope of a settlement unless Russia intervenes to end the dispute by acting as arbitrator between the contending parties.

ALL-AUSTRALIA EXHIBITION PLAN

(Special to the Monitor)
MELBOURNE, Vic., Aus.—An all-Australian exhibition in connection with the Associated Chambers of Manufacturers of Australia, will be held in the exhibition building, Melbourne, for two months from Sept. 13 next. The exhibition will be the first of a series which the associated chambers have decided to carry out in the several Australian states in rotation.

At the Melbourne exhibition working exhibits of trade processes in operation will be shown. During the period selected Melbourne is always filled with country and interstate visitors for the royal agricultural show, the Henley regatta and the Caulfield and Melbourne cups.

GERMAN SPY LAW MAY BE SEVERER

(Special to the Monitor)
BERLIN, Germany—A bill, which the Reichstag will soon have to consider, proposes to amend the law of July 1893 with regard to the betrayal of military secrets, in a manner which may be fairly described as drastic. "Military secrets" will apparently be so defined as to cover all information not specifically published by the authorities.

The punishments will be much more severe and "careless" disclosures of secrets will be a penal offense. Newspapers carelessly publishing anything that can be described as secret information with regard to naval and military matters will be liable to heavy punishment. Visitors to fortified places who give inaccurate accounts of themselves will be regarded as spies.

Great June Sale Muslin Underwear

Three Best Manufacturers' Stocks About Half Price

As examples of the values in the sale there are 5.00 White Skirts for 1.95; 5.00 Night Gowns for 1.95; 6.00 Combinations for 2.95; 85c Crepe Skirts for 55c; 1.00 Corset Covers for 35c; 2.25 Crepe Night Gowns for 1.00; 3.00 Combinations for 1.50; and hundreds of others of equal interest.

The underwear in this sale is from the three largest makers of fine underwear in America, and the garments are their very best styles and numbers—such as are specialized in by prominent New York firms.

When such garments as these are sold at from fifty to sixty per cent of their values it makes an occasion of importance to the shopping public.

Such an occasion is this underwear sale. It is a sale of the best underwear at about a half less than the price of ordinary kinds.

Added to this is a complete sample line of the highest class underwear novelties made, many of which are marked half price and less.

The yokes alone on some of these garments are worth the entire price asked for the garment. Some of the garments in this sale are at less even than the manufacturing cost and some are at less than the cost of the laces, embroideries and muslins alone.

DR. MULLER AWAITED EAGERLY BY OFFICIALS AT WASHINGTON

Brazil's Foreign Minister Thought Well Fitted to Bring Good Will Message to United States—Practical Results Expected

PLAN HIS RECEPTION

COMING to the United States on board the Brazilian dreadnought Minas Geraes, Dr. Lauro Severina Muller, minister of foreign affairs of Brazil, is awaited by the American authorities with pleasure, because an opportunity is now presented to repay the hospitality that Dr. Muller's country extended Senator Root when the latter visited Brazil six years ago, when secretary of state, and as a representative of his government.

There is no man in the southern republic, perhaps, who could better carry a message of international goodwill to the United States than Dr. Muller. Signally honored by his own nation; indefatigable in bringing progress to bear at home, and in fostering friendship with other countries, this notable Brazilian comes to the north at a time when many important matters concerning trade and traffic between the respective nations are being considered.

Party's Personnel

Arrangements for the entertainment of Dr. Muller and his large suite are in the hands of the government and show the importance Washington attaches to this visit. The Brazilians accompanying Dr. Muller are Helio Lobo, the official secretary; J. K. Alves, private secretary; Alberto Impanema Moreira; Mauricio Nabuco, son of the former ambassador; Dr. Nabuco; Capt. Oliveira Sampaio; Lieut. Eulides Fonseca, son of the president of Brazil; and Capt. Antonio Jose da Fonseca, the Brazilian military attaché at Washington.

The Minas Geraes is in charge of Commander Henrique Thedim Costa. This battleship itself will attract attention. Brazil has lately gone in heavily for navy equipment and already possesses a number of men-of-war that lend dignity to the naval program of the republic.

It is, however, in peaceful pursuits that Dr. Muller has earned a reputation for executive ability and clearheadedness. Rio de Janeiro is what it is today because when Dr. Muller was federal minister of public works, under President Rodrigues Alves, he initiated the reconstructive scheme that has made the capital of the republic into one of the handsomest cities in the world. It was a task that required the tearing down of structures of entire districts, constructing boulevards, establishing parks and turning some of the most dilapidated sections into regions of architectural beauty. Dr. Muller belongs to the regular army of Brazil, but since 1899 he has been in the diplomatic service in one or other capacity. He became the logical successor to Baron Rio Branco when that esteemed statesman ceased his labors. The people of Brazil, recognizing the importance of the visit to the United States, gave the party an enthusiastic send-off when the Minas Geraes steamed out of the harbor of Rio de Janeiro. It was realized in trade circles that if something was not done quickly and permanently there was danger of commercial complications with the United States growing out of the coffee valorization and certain other affairs having to do with export and import. Dr. Muller is expected to have sessions with the secretary of state and his associates, and to be able to straighten out many tangled skeins.

Washington Preparations

Washington has been chosen as the leading point for entertaining the distinguished Brazilian guests. Official recognition of the visit begins when the assigned American warships go to sea for the purpose of meeting the Minas Geraes and escorting the battleship to its anchorage in Hampton Roads, Va. Here representatives of the government and state, navy and war officials, also representatives of the Pan-American union will greet the visitors. The Brazilian ambassador at Washington, Dr. Domicio da Gama, also is to entertain extensively while his countrymen are here. After visiting Washington Dr. Muller and his suite are to visit other leading cities, including Boston.

GENEVA AVE. WIDENING NOW AIM OF IMPROVERS

With Newly Elected Officers and Another Campaign Mapped Out Grove Hall Association Proposes to Work for Excellent Thoroughfare to Columbia Road

Under the direction of the public works committee, of which Francis J. Murray is the chairman, the Grove Hall Improvement Association is lending its efforts to the widening of Geneva avenue from Grove Hall to Columbia road, which was overlooked by the commissioners in granting double track privileges to the Boston Elevated.

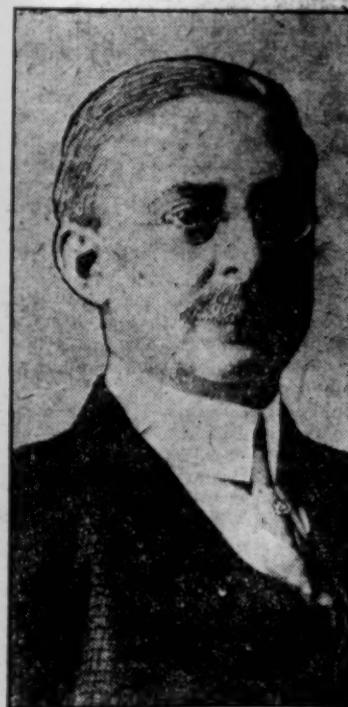

At the last meeting of the association the following officers were elected: President, Dr. I. R. Miranda; vice-president, Frank W. Morse; secretary, Henry L. Smith; treasurer, F. H. Folsom. The directors chosen were Charles W. Restrick, J. B. Hersey, W. F. Griffin, E. B. Wilder, Joseph Coffin. The delegates to the convention of the United Improvement Association are Dr. I. R. Miranda, Francis J. Murray and W. C. Bowditch.

Although it is only a few months ago that 17 business men of Grove Hall met at the Boston City Club to discuss the organizing of a public welfare association, many improvements have already been brought about. Before the organization of the association Grove Hall, a busy transfer point, had been much neglected. After a campaign of five months on the part of the committee appointed, the Elevated opened a public waiting station at Grove Hall. With the assistance of Louis K. Rourke, commissioner of public works, who is a member of the association, the city and the Elevated have improved the general condition of the neighborhood by restoring the flagging on the crosswalks and raising the track bed so as to shed the water and not overflow the catch basins. In April permanent headquarters were secured at 406 Blue Hill avenue, through J. L. Webber, division master of the Elevated at Grove Hall.

With the new offices another campaign is being mapped out and the association expects to become more of a force for civic improvement than before.

ROXBURY LATIN TO HAVE NEW SCHOOL

At the alumni meeting of the Roxbury Latin school after the graduation exercises Friday, William H. Shocum, treasurer of the board of trustees, announced that a new building will be erected on Seaver street. The announcement came somewhat as a surprise, although the step has long been contemplated. The site on which the trustees have had an option since March contains nearly three acres. The estimated cost of the building is $125,000, the land being held at $60,000.

The Minnesota cases have been nearly 10 years in development. They began in 1904 in a complaint by the Minnesota Shippers Association that certain freight rates were excessive. The Legislature of the next year directed investigation by the railroad commission and after a year of inquiry the Legislature carried the matter into effect by ordering freight rates reduced. In 1907, passenger rates were ordered reduced by 33 1-3 per cent and commodity rates were further lowered. Then followed the struggle in the state courts, the several roads seeking injunction against the enforcement of the law and the state battling for its ground in a contest that was so spirited that the at-

HOW PLAYS AND PLAYERS CHANGE

Types of Dramas, to Suit Modern Times and Audiences, Make Necessary Different Characteristics in Those Presenting Them

WHILE the elements of good acting, like the elements of all art, are the same now as they were a half century ago, the application of these elements has altered somewhat with the change in types of play. This change now has resulted in restoring the balance between story and acting interest, a balance that was for a long time upset by the emphasis that was laid on the actor in the first three quarters of the nineteenth century.

Sincerity is the fundamental quality of all art worthy of consideration, and all acting, whether employed in tragedy, comedy, melodrama or farce must be sincere to be good. This sincerity arises principally out of belief in one's part as real, belief in the whole play as real, using real in the sense of the imaginatively real, which is the only sense in which realism has to do with art. A play that would be a reflection of actual life, with all life's diffuseness and artistic non-essentials, would be incredibly dull on the stage, where only the essence of life is to be presented if the audience is to be kept interested.

Emphasis on Acting

Romantic plays of the type of "Richelieu" were strictly of the theater, designed first of all to display a powerful actor in effective situations. Indeed, this play and others of its kind were composed at the elbow of Macready, who was to act the principal role in each. Plays of this order were built up on the assumption that the audience went to see the actor through the play.

In modern revulsion against the false balance we have seen static plays, such as Strindberg's "Creditors," in which interest in character dissection is so strong that the audience thinks scarcely at all of the actors as actors. Indeed the actors become merely the medium for the transmission of the author's message, and the play is seen through the actors.

It is claimed by some that the Strindberg type of play is an ideal one, yet the carrying out of this theory to its ultimate will mean acceptance of Gordon Craig's ideal of the theater of marionettes.

A paper could be written upon this Craig idea, but the present article is concerned with the attitude of the average American playgoer in the theater of today.

Such a playgoer shows an evenly balanced interest between play and player, and this balanced interest, we take it, is consistent with the peculiar appeal of the theater. If interested in the play only as a play, why not stay at home and read the best ones, since most of them are published? On the other hand, if the interest was in the player as a personality, our popular players would never have a failure, since the public would go to see them in whatever they did. Yet David Warfield and Maude Adams have had their failures, and no one is more popular than they.

Audiences, then, are interested about equally in the good player acting in an interesting play. That an exceptional actor can carry a mediocre play or that an exceptional play can carry mediocre actors are variations that but prove the rule of the normal.

Preparing Role

What, then, is a good actor? One who thinks out his role thoroughly in the period of rehearsal; yet does not allow it to become cast into a hard form, for it is the first performance before an audience that should be the mold of an impersonation.

The actor who works out a role in private and reveals it in a hard-baked form at the first presentation in reality gives a worse performance than the more lazy actor who leaves himself pliable and gets his form from the first performance. Such a player is the truer actor, for he will gain form with succeeding performances while the player who does all his acting beforehand, not allowing the audience to help him complete his work, will give a dry performance to the end of the run.

The best actors are those who think out not only their first performance, but every performance; who go consistently to the theater feeling conscience-bound to believe in their part and their play. The actor of the "Richelieu" type of play concentrated on belief in his part—sometimes believing in the part as a real character, if the actor was an artist—but generally believing in his part only as a good acting part.

This is not to say that we have greater actors today than in the days of Macready, Booth, Forrest and Barrett, but that standards of acting have changed with the change in the actor's task. And not only the viewpoint, but the type of play has changed, for in place of projecting idealized characters of gigantic emotions, we are occupied with the actual commonplace of possible present-day experience.

This lowering of key has naturally brought in new types of actor, and we can say whether or not he is "natural" because we can measure his behavior by that of persons in real life. This "natural" test some even unjustly apply to the acting of the classic idealistic play, and ask that Shakespeare's idealized human beings behave like the idealized persons of everyday life.

With the coming of this "natural" era has come in some quarters a demand for "absolute" impersonation, a feat impossible except to such rare performers as the Italian actor, Novelli, who apparently can seem to be anybody and anything from an ape to King Lear.

This, however, is not acting according to any universal, practicable standard.

A role, in the acting, takes on the color of the player's personality. This is instanced in the performances given by actors and actresses who have been called great.

It is this unique color of personality, added to great talent and thorough technique, that causes memories to come thronging with the mention of the names of Joseph Jefferson, Richard Mansfield, Henry Irving, and Ellen Terry, to the younger playgoers of the day. Their elders warm with memories of Edwin Booth, the Barretts, William Warren, Adelaide Nielsen, Edgar Davenport, Charlotte Cushman and many others. Still on the stage, exercising the same appeal, are Julia Marlowe, Forbes-Robertson, Sir John Hare, Bernhardt, Duse, and others not known to the English-speaking stage, as there have been since the beginnings of modern drama in Italy, Spain, France, Germany, Russia, Scandinavia and England, from 100 to 300 years ago.

It is this individual color of the talented player that makes possible so many differing interpretations of a single character. Thus we have seen Hamlets ranging from the Rembrandt-like monotone of Mr. Sothorn to that of Sir Johnstone Forbes-Robertson, brilliantly colorful as a painting by La Touche. Yet both had Hamlet's essence.

tial quality of irresolution. So Romeo was passionate, even though a gloomy churl as acted by Sothorn and a polished gallant as acted by Bellew.

Turning again to changes in applied-acting principles, we see expression through quieter means, both because the day of declamatory plays has gone, and because of the change in theater construction. Broad gestures, marked movements were needed in the older style theaters with their immense auditoriums. Little of George Arliss' subtle performance would get over the footlights in the Boston theater, yet not the slightest inflection of his eyes was lost in the shallow Plymouth theater under the brilliant glare of the footlights. These footlights have done much to make expression quieter, for the actor does not need to do so much for the audience which can see keenly, because so near, and because helped by strong light.

Now that audiences can see so much, the actor no longer needs to play to the audience, though some of the older school players still do it. They know how, let it be added, to play to the audience without seeming to, but this is becoming a lost trick, if one is to judge by the attempts of newcomers to the stage, who thus adopt merely the attitude of the vaudeville performer. Expert acting of the quality that puts the actor on very good terms with the audience, yet never steps over the line into the vaudeville province is seen in the work of John Drew, a player whose acting is often underrated, but who is very skilful in his own way.

The actors of the present have to face problems, both in their plays and in their theaters, different from those which the players of the past faced. Only on the solid ground of art principles, rather than art fashions, can comparisons be made.

MUSIC SEASON COMPLETE IN PLAN

Work of Concert Agents in Laying Out Tours of Visiting Artists for 1913-14 Found to Be Practically Finished

FROM the business point of view, the American concert season begins not in the autumn, when singers and players start in to perform, but many months before. It begins, in fact, just when the calendar year begins. Administratively, the music season of 1913-14 began when the season of 1911-12 was at its height artistically, in January; and in certain important respects it is completed in June, although the Paderewskis, the Elmans and the Melbas will not land in New York and the public will not listen to them until October. So far as the main arrangements of contracts and schedules are concerned, the concert season of 1913-14 is finished now, four months before the first note is sounded.

One department of musical enterprise, in which there has been no cornering of the artists' services is that of concert-giving. While opera in the United States is absolutely under the control of a few men in New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago, who entertain strict understandings with one another in regard to the distribution of the labors of singers, no such arrangement exists in the concert field. Exclusive hold on an artist's services is not secured by any institution or individual except on the most open terms of competition.

For this reason concert music is far more democratic than operatic music and for this reason, too, concert singing is of far more interest to many artists than opera singing. The great soprano is entirely free to choose her manager in America; she may even sing under the direction of a European manager if she chooses. She can order her career and build up her popularity in any way she sees fit.

Agents Available

The United States is overflowing with concert agents ready to manage tours of the country for singers and players, and every community has its local concert manager who is in sympathetic relation with his public and knows how it can be approached and called out to support a visiting artist. The local manager is an important element in the business of concert giving, but the manager of artistic continental tours is the man of principal importance. He is of various types, from the man who will handle only those artists who have firmly established their reputation and who are sure of drawing out a house if their names are but posted on the billboards, to the man who will put on the road any new graduate of a music school who has a little cash with which to prop up the venture. There is a type of manager between these extremes who is keen to secure the services of proved artists and is yet willing to give an earnest aspirant an opportunity before the public.

The managers having the greatest authority in the musical world are not those who direct the tours of the United States, but those who stand at the gateways of educational Germany, France and Italy, and get hold of the choicest products of the studios and conservatories as soon as they are ready for the concert hall. The commanding managers are to be found in the artistic capitals of Europe. They hold the American situation to a large extent in their hands. Even the great financial figures of the American operatic alliance or their representatives, the American opera directors, have to lay aside the character of autocrat when they approach the agents of Paris, Berlin, Milan and London.

Contracts Signed

The American agent, therefore, who meditates a winter of concert tours for great artists first goes to work to secure the singers, pianists and violinists that he will send over the country. That is to say, he persuades a few Melbas, Paderewskis and Elmans, who believe in his business capacity, to sign contracts with him.

These contracts are made in a variety of ways, according to the reputation of the artist. Many artists come to the United States with a guarantee of a certain number of performances at a certain price for each performance, and the whole sum is to be paid whether all the appearances are arranged for or not, and whether the artist draws in box-office receipts the amount of the guarantee or not. Others come on a percentage basis, allowing the agent perhaps one-tenth of the gross receipts, out of which he pays all expenses except the railway fares of the artist. In return the agent guarantees a certain number of appearances. The former arrangement is the more speculative for the agent, the latter for the artist.

According to another form of bargain, the agent buys the services of an artist, guaranteeing a number of appearances at so much an appearance, but selling the services of the artist to other managers instead of directly using them himself. Some of these appearances will net a gain for the agent, others a loss. Some time periods in the season may be unproductive of audience and some localities may show appreciation of the artist, but the idea is that in the year's run the arrangement will turn out profitable. Lastly, a few very popular artists come to America on their own account and hire a man to arrange the business of their tour for them.

Generally speaking, then, there are four kinds of artists on the concert stage: First, the guaranteed artist; second, the percentage artist; third, the artist whose services are bought outright to be sold again outright; and fourth, the independent artist.

Popularity Item

Other forms of contract may call for a number of performances for a fixed price, with certain cities excepted, the artist taking advantage of the popularity he has won in previous seasons in some of the larger communities and making special terms for his bookings in them. Thus a soprano who is willing to sing in small cities for 40 per cent of the receipts and a fee of $500 may demand an arrangement in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Boston that will give her the bulk of the box-office receipts and that will leave the agent a fee or a percentage. According to another form the artist is paid a minimum guarantee for a certain number of appearances, taking, perhaps, a fee of $500 and 40 per cent of the receipts, but in concerts that net over a certain sum taking the fee and 50 per cent.

MEXICAN ROMANCE TO BE PRODUCED BY MISS GORDON

Miss Eleanor Gordon and her stock company at the Plymouth theater will appear Monday evening in the first production anywhere of "The Mexican," a drama by "Mildred Champagne," said to be a humorous and pathetic love story of life in Mexico by one who has been in the country. In Miss Gordon's support will appear Mrs. George A. Hubbard, Rosamond Carpenter, Francesa Rotoli, Douglas J. Wood, Wright Kramer, John Meahan, Edward Langford, Frederick Burt and others. Wryley Birch is now manager of the company.

"The Royal Mounted," a romantic melodrama by William and Cecil DeMille, is to be the attraction at the Castle Square theater, next week. William Carleton will play a member of the Canadian mounted police who is sent into the woods to arrest a man, but finally lets the man go, believing him justified, and then stands trial himself for neglect of duty. All ends happily. For the final week of the John Craig stock company season, beginning June 23, Hoyt's farce with music, "A Trip to Chinatown," will be the entertainment.

A moving picture version of "Quo Vadis," which has been popular both in book and play form, will be shown at the Tremont theater beginning Monday afternoon, with two daily performances. The pictures are everywhere praised highly.

Miss Vinie Daly will be a feature of the B. F. Keith vaudeville entertainment next week. Others who will appear are Jack Kennedy and company in a skit; Leitzel sisters and Janette, aerialists; O'Brien and Havel in a sketch; the Stanleys, silhouettists; Sue Smith, singer; Miller and Mack, dancers; Lord and Payne, acrobats; talking pictures.

WEYMOUTH MASONS TO LAY CORNERSTONE

EAST WEYMOUTH, Mass.—Ceremonies in connection with laying the cornerstone of the new Masonic Temple are being held today under the auspices of the Grand lodge of Massachusetts.

The new building will replace the structure that was burned Jan. 15, 1912, and a feature of today's exercises is that Martin E. Hawes, the same chaplain of Orphans' Hope lodge, A. F. and A. M., who officiated at the first masonic building 29 years ago, again officiates today. Mr. Hawes has been chaplain of the lodge 33 consecutive years.

The committee in charge of today's rites consists of Henry P. Tilden, chairman, Gardner R. P. Barker, John Taylor, Frank H. Torry, Sherman P. Troy, Arthur Burr, Henry J. Beck, Frank W. Bates, Eben H. Cain, Charles W. Dunbar, Charles J. Jordan, Josiah B. Reed, T. John Evans and Winthrop J. Cushing.

The temple will be completed in the early fall and will be occupied by Orphans' Hope lodge, A. F. and A. M.; Pentalpha R. A. chapter, Temple council, R. and S. M., and South Shore commandery.

The building will be a two story structure with a finished basement, built of red water-struck brick with limestone trimmings, including a limestone main entrance, limestone lintels and cornice.

Y. M. C. A. COLLEGE GRADUATES 36

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.—Thirty-six pupils were graduated from the Young Men's Christian Association College yesterday afternoon, the exercises being held in the West gymnasium. The Rev. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational church of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the chief speaker at the commencement. The honorary degree of master of humanities was conferred by President L. L. Doggett upon William Knowles Cooper of Washington, D. C., formerly of Springfield, at the conclusion of the program, while Dr. R. Tait MacKenzie, physical director of the university of Pennsylvania, received the honorary degree of master of physical education. Following the commencement exercises the presentation of the 1913 cement walk, the gift of the graduating class, was made to the college by Charles Line and accepted by President Doggett.

BELTED COAT IS FASHIONABLE MAKING MORE ROOM FOR HUSBAND IN THE CLOSET

Distinctive model that is easily made

EVERY kind of belted garment is fashionable. This coat can be used with a skirt to match, making a suit, or worn as a separate wrap. It has many advantages. It is really distinctive in effect, yet it is simple and it can be made with great ease.

It is adapted to almost every seasonable material. If it is made of silk, it will be a handsome coat, adapted to afternoon needs; if it is made of blue serge with a skirt to match, it will be adapted to traveling or general utility wear; if it is made of bright red serge, it can be worn over white gowns when an extra wrap is needed, and if it is made of linen or pique, it can be utilized for similar purposes, and it will be just as fashionable used as a separate wrap as made with a skirt to match.

Either a belt of the material or one of leather can be used, but patent leather gives a distinctive touch.

There are only front and back portions and there is no stiffening used in coats of this sort and, consequently, the making is very simple.

For the medium size the coat will require 3½ yards of material 27, 3 yards 36, 2 yards 44 or 1½ yards 52 inches wide.

The pattern of the coat (7881) is cut in sizes from 34 to 40 inches bust measure.

It can be bought at any May Mantion agency, or will be sent by mail. Address 102 West Thirty-second street, New York, or Masonic Temple, Chicago.

ONE husband relates that when they moved into the house in which they now dwell a whole closet was assigned to him for his very own, and he was simple enough to believe that he was really to possess for his private use the 23 hooks that it contained, says Marion Harland in the New York Press. His dream of bliss was short lived. He does not state how soon it was he learned that he had a recognized right to only one of the number, but he does say that, determined to have a place for his clothes, he forthwith built an addition to the closet! Even this has not availed him, however, and the only point he can depend on for hanging his clothes, in addition to the one hook already mentioned, is the bed post!

Our houses are almost all inadequately supplied with closet room. In spite of the agitation on this subject, which has existed for years past—for the man's lack of place to hang his clothes is no new thing—architects and builders have failed to meet the need in this as in many other respects.

If we women had our way we would probably like to attack the situation in a thorough fashion, put up additions, cut off corners of rooms, and in other generous ways increase our stock of closet room. Perhaps there may be a woman here and there who is fortunate enough to be able to do something of the kind, but she is in the minority. What is there that the others can do to meet the husband's needs in a practical and helpful fashion?

One of the means resorted to most frequently, and which is in many cases as satisfactory as anything I know, is a framework, which may be made of pine and painted to match the woodwork of the room, to hold part of a wife's things. The top and sides are of boards, the back is an open frame, the front is masked by a curtain.

To steady the floor, a shelf may be put across the lower part, about 10 inches from the floor, leaving space to clean underneath, and shoes and boxes may be kept on this shelf.

The height of the closet should be at least six feet, so that gowns or coats may be hung in it at full length.

Hooks may be secured to the framework across the back and a rod run from one side to the other will support clothes hangers and furnish space that could not be attained without it.

When you have a free corner of the room for such a closet as this, have one, by all means. A substitute for it is made by putting up a shelf in a corner, screwing hooks into the under side of this, and protecting the garments hung from these by a curtain.

Let me give a few words of decided advice as to such closets as these.
In the first place have them substantially put together. In the second place, hang your curtain for the front on a rod with rings, and make it of cretonne or other wash goods, that it may be taken down and laundered frequently when dust settles in it. Thirdly, do not hang your best garments in such an open closet, unless you put them in bags.

Such a closet is better for dressing gowns, "tub frocks," night dresses, wash slips and petticoats than for gowns made of silk or woolen, or any fabric which will catch and hold dust. If such must be hung here, make bags which will protect them and keep them clean.

If you can't achieve another closet, make the best of the old one, and the wisest way to do this is by means of a rod and hangers. By the help of this you triple or more the capacity of the closet, and do it without crowding your clothes to the extent of injuring them.

This rod is to be run from end to end of the closet, may be of brass or wood—an ordinary curtain rod will answer perfectly—and must be fastened securely, since it will have much weight to bear. Back of it, on the hooks at the rear wall of the closet, may be hung skirts, slips, combinations, wrappers, kimonos and the like. The hangers for skirts and waists and gowns are on the rod, also hangers for trousers and coats.

HELPING THE MOVERS

It should be remembered that large boxes, cupboards, wardrobes, etc., that are filled with articles such as books, etc., are made unnecessarily heavy and it imposes very hard work on the men who are doing your moving for you. It is, however, perfectly safe to fill drawers with such things as pillows, down cushions, eiderdowns, etc. Linen is heavy in proportion to its bulk, and special cases should be set aside for the household linens, the boxes being filled with special damp-proof paper, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. Cushions make excellent buffers for pictures, but any very precious pictures should be packed by professionals, if they have any distance to go, so that some compensation may be secured in the event of breakage or other damage. The same rule applies to china and glass.

LACE INSERTION WATCH FOB

A watch fob which would be particularly nice for wear with summer gown can be made with a bit of Irish lace insertion, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. Attach one end of the lace to a tiny buckle, fasten the clasp in place and then draw the other end of the lace through the buckle. Allow the insertion to extend an inch below the buckle. Fold the lace into a point and finish with a silk tassel.

An odd length of silk can also be fashioned into a fob. Slash the ends and fasten a tiny buckle a short distance from the ends to prevent the ribbon from slipping over the catch.

GAS MAY BE SAVED

When baking potatoes, cook your cereal for the next day in the oven.
The double boiler does as well in the stove as on it. So does the soup kettle. When baking beans, fill the oven with things that require long, slow cooking. Put the covered kettle of soup at the back, as that will take care of itself, says the Delineator. Next put in the beanpot and double boiler with omelet. When the breakfast food is done, put in its place a covered granite dish containing prunes. The last two hours before dinner is to be served cook a dish of macaroni or one of the many puddings that do well in a moderate oven.

UTENSILS MENDED READILY WITH ASSISTANCE OF REEDS

EVERY housewife should learn something of the handling of reeds, for she can apply the knowledge to many every-day services, such as mending a broken border on a waste basket, weaving a new handle for an old basket, or replacing a broken ball on a favorite Chinese teapot. Half a pound of number two reed at a cost of about 20 cents will save many times its cost in making damaged utensils useful again, says the Youths Companion.

To make a bail or handle for the Chinese teapot, cut six lengths of flexible number two reed at least six inches longer than the old handle of the teapot. Soak them for a few minutes to make them pliable. Thrust one end of the group of reeds through the china loop on the teapot from the outside, so that the short ends point toward the lid. Draw the reeds through for about three inches, and bend the short ends gently up against the long ends. Do not attempt to make a sharp angle where the reeds go through the china loop, for if you do, the stems may snap.

Now divide your reeds into three groups, and keeping each short end pressed against its own long end, begin an ordinary braid.
That incorporates them into the braid so that they will not pull out.

Continue braiding rather loosely after you have worked the short ends in, until the braid is long enough to make a suitable handle. Pass the loose ends through the china loop on the opposite side of the cover. Since you cannot braid in the short ends on that side, work them back into the braid one by one. If you use care not to bend them abruptly, you will have no difficulty in pushing them in and out through the braid until the ends are used up. When you have worked them all neatly into the braid, cut off the projecting ends with the scissors.

TRIED RECIPES

VEGETABLE HARLEQUIN
COOK half a peck of spinach, as usual, in a very little salted water. When done, drain very dry by pressing in a colander, chop fine, and season. Cut three or four cooked beets into small dice, and heat in a saucepan in a tablespoonful of butter. Season with salt and pepper. Reheat about two cupfuls of drained cold peas in the same way.
Arrange the spinach in a ring around a small platter. It should be dry enough to make a ridge an inch and a half high. Inside the ring at either end put the beets, and in the middle the peas, keeping the line of division as straight as possible. Over the whole sprinkle minced parsley, and send very hot to the table. This dish may be varied according to the vegetables available, and is a good way to utilize small left-overs.

FAVORITE CHICKEN TART

Parboil one pound of unbroken spaghetti. Cook 15 minutes and drain through a colander. Line a buttered mold with the spaghetti, twisting it around the inside of the mold. Make a cream sauce by melting one tablespoonful of butter, adding one-half tablespoonful of flour and when blended adding one-half cupful of milk. Season with salt, pepper, nutmeg and chopped parsley. When thickened pour over one slightly beaten yolk of an egg. Return to fire and add two cupfuls of cold diced chicken. Place the chicken mixture in the center of the spaghetti lined mold and steam one hour.
Turn out on a deep platter and surround with tomato sauce.

EGGS AND CELERY

Cut two bunches of celery into one-inch lengths, wash thoroughly, cover with boiling water and simmer for one half-hour, or until tender. Drain, saving the water for soup stock or for another dish. Rub two tablespoonfuls of butter and two tablespoonfuls of flour together, and add one cupful of milk. When thickened add the celery, with one teaspoonful of salt and one saltspoonful of pepper. Keep hot over water. Have ready half a dozen rounds of hot buttered toast on a hot platter. Poach five eggs. Put one egg on each toast round and pour the celery sauce over them.
Serve very hot.

MINT POTATOES

Wash small potatoes and rub off the skins with a coarse towel, or pare and scrape them. Put into boiling water with sprigs of mint sufficient to flavor them well, and cook until done, drain and serve with drawn butter.—Good Housekeeping.

NEW PIE TO TRY

Tomato and rice pie is a new dish to most cooks, says the New Haven Journal-Courier. Wash four ounces of rice in several waters. Stew one pound of tomatoes and strain, seasoning them with salt and allspice. Boil rice thoroughly and drain. Place alternate layers of rice and tomato pulp in a pie dish and cover with tomato. Scatter on top breadcrumbs moistened with butter.
Bake in a steady oven for half an hour and serve in a pie dish.

TO CLEAR SOUP

Many housewives dislike to strain soup. This discovery may make it easier: Pour the soup, while hot, through a muslin cloth which has just been wrung out of ice water. When it has all been strained, heat again and serve.—New York Press.

MAKES CAKE LIGHT

When making sponge cake it is a good plan to put a tablespoonful of water with the chill off it into the cake mixture directly after pouring in the eggs. This makes the cake deliciously light and spongy.—Janessville Gazette.

FINE GOWNS AT RITZ'S IN PARIS, AND LOVELY HATS

IT seemed strange on such a sunny afternoon to find so many people at Ritz's, but the long narrow hall with its French windows wide open to the garden, full of sunshine and greenery and red geraniums and white marguerites, looked and was a very pleasant place, and there we found a crowd of the very best dressed people, writes a Paris contributor to the Monitor.

A woman gowned in soft black satin was well turned out from her black hat, small, with a huge butterfly bow of black tulle to her dainty shoes of black velvet with finest cut steel buckles. The gown was simply draped, a long fold coming from a paste ornament in the shape of a horseshoe fastening the swathed belt at the back, the bodice and sleeves were cut in one and closely fitting with long lines across the figure, the deep V filled in with ivory tinted tulle, also V-shaped, and black velvet, less than an inch wide, hanging like a necklace just where the satin rested on the tulle and kept in place by the weight of the beautiful jet ornament that made it end in a point below the bust. The waist was well defined and in its right place.

Another soft black satin gown, closely swathing the feet, had an ecrû Robespierre collar and lace ruffles, the same shade, a swathed sash of striped red and black satin ribbon, finished with a quaint bow at the left side of the front.

A well-dressed woman had a very charmingly draped black satin skirt with the prettiest little short coat of mastic-colored silk corduroy. This little coat was turned back sharply from the front below the waist with about five small round jet buttons at each side, a tiny black leather belt, slightly above the waist, upstanding ruffles of ecrû lace for the collar coming down outlining the open V in front and nestling in under a bunch of beautifully colored rose geraniums. A tiny black hat with a large ruche of tulle completed a most effective little costume.

For an older woman a soft crepe de chine in dark blue had a trimming of the finest jet worked upon it, giving long becoming lines, a bright brown velvet rose with green foliage was tucked in at the waist and completed the costume.

A pale moleskin soft satin made another delightful afternoon tailored suit. The skirt drapery seemed to come round from the front, and knot at the back, about the level of the knees, while below this was a finely plaited underskirt, also of the satin. The tunic in front was buttoned down with round jet buttons, while buttons of a larger size buttoned the wide sleeve up into a turnback cuff, just below the elbow, and from the top of this cuff a fine silk fringe in moleskin color went round the elbow, making the prettiest sleeve trimming imaginable. A soft ivory satin Robespierre collar came down into an open waistcoat with buttons one side and buttonholes the other over a vest of plain mousseline de soie, the same shade. A black hat, medium size and flat, had brims of tulle coming beyond the straw brim, a tie of black velvet and a couple of richly colored roses nestling on the brim near the crown.

Every one who is smart is wearing artificial flowers as a corsage decoration. Some have a tiny bunch of many colored silk flowers, others have a larger flower, a velvet rose in lovely petunia shades or a bunch of silk wallflowers in browns and yellows, tucked in at the waist. The long open V with framing of soft lace ruffles seems to demand this finish, and every woman appears to have priceless pearls in a string round her bare neck, but whether these are priceless or clever imitations is a secret that none but the wearer could reveal, for the imitations are so clever that it would take an expert to distinguish between the real and the thing.

A delicate ecrû echarpe was of black chiffon over white chiffon with hemstitched edges and many rows of soft white and black marabout on it. One says white and black because the white was most in evidence and made this a particularly becoming finish to the gown of soft black satin and lace. The marabout was not at the edges, but about six inches from it, and there were about six rows of it. The echarpe was worn in the new way the fur stoles have been worn, back to front, crossed behind and the ends brought back to the front under the arms and pinned together.

The Place Vendôme looked beautiful and stately as one left Ritz's. The figure of Napoleon on his wonderful column stood out clear against the cloudless blue sky. One could even see the stern, clear-cut face, and swallows skimming around his laurel-wreathed head alighted on the little winged figure of victory he bears in his right hand. One certainly owes him a debt of gratitude for the part he took in making Paris so beautiful.

On our way home we went in to Camille Roger's in the rue de la Paix to look at her hats, and very wonderful they were. Especially interesting was it to see the way the bright little vendeuse who was showing the hats to us literally dived into them, but the effect was always charming, even when the hat looked uninteresting in the hand. When the head was tucked away well inside it, the result was quite satisfactory. A small cloche shape is very much worn in finest pique straw; one in dark blue with a huge papillon of black tulle bigger far than the whole hat, placed on in front; another in black finest straw, but with the brim in two parts, the front part turned down and the sides still quite narrow turned daintily up, showing a lining of pale rose silk tulle. A great black tulle papillon at the back made the trimming.

Another delightful hat with wide brim of black tulle, so cleverly wired it looked as light as a cloud, had a crumpled crown of black tulle with twists of lovely rose satin ribbon and a bow at one side.

A charming Louis XVI. hat had a brim of white in a material that was as thin as chiffon but rougher looking, a crown of stretched black velvet and a big ruche of black tulle with a tie of narrow ribbon, black one side and white the other, tied in a tiny bow in front, and another tiny bow at the back where it seemed to hold up the brim, lifted high to show the hair. A finest rose straw had a big ruche of black tulle. This seems to be the favorite trimming of the moment, and nothing is more becoming.

A bright blue natter cloche shape had one big rose in front, and the foliage from this wandered right across from front to back, and fell behind, with a rosebud or two. Black velvet strings gave a most becoming touch to this quaint hat, which yet looked lovely on the head.

A picture hat, big and shady, of most picturesque design in fine black straw, had a huge flat bow of black tulle, the whole width of the tulle doubled from side to side and caught across the center from the back to the front of the hat, with a flat tie of exquisite satin, neither pale blue nor pale green but the color of a kingfisher, and one La France rose on the brim to the right.

A cornflower blue hat of medium size was trimmed with cornflowers, with touches of cerise appearing in lines between, and here and there a small chiffon rose of the same cerise shade. Every hat one saw was interesting, individual and becoming.

THIS braided design makes a very effective decoration for a linen or pique dress. Soutache braid should be sewed along the lines with small stitches. A very fine coronation braid may also be used.

CHINESE LADIES QUITE SECLUDED IN SOCIAL WAY

IT IS difficult to get acquainted with Chinese families, for the custom is to keep their women and girls in seclusion, while the men and boys are brought into prominence. A gentleman's wife is never to be seen by outsiders. When he has a guest, she is never to appear, but must remain in another apartment quite out of sight. A girl baby is always a disappointment, but a boy is welcomed with delight. As gentlemen never make social calls on Chinese ladies, it is difficult to form their acquaintance. Therefore, the missionaries have to resort to ingenious ways to get acquainted with their neighbors, and many of their methods are very laughable.

One lady at Chefoo said to the writer that she was going to have a meeting at her home for Chinese ladies and naturally the writer thinking that would be a novel experience, invited himself and said that he would be around at the appointed time, but was informed that that would be impossible owing to the fact that men were never allowed where Chinese ladies were congregated.

Then she related the trouble that she has when making their acquaintance. One of the most successful ways was to call at a house with her son, who was about six years old at the time. All would want to see the foreign boy, and the ladies of the house would come to the door and make a time over the little fellow, but they would pay no attention whatever to the lady herself. After the first burst of curiosity had partly worn off, the lady would say, "What a pretty tidy," or "What a queer chair," or anything that she could see to talk about to commence a conversation with them. "May I go in and look at that?" for they would never ask her to come in. After getting inside and admiring that particular thing, other things would attract her attention to be admired and then she would ask if she could sit down a few minutes to rest herself, which being granted, a general conversation would be carried on about the simple things that they knew about in general, such as how nice they kept their house, how prettily upon the material. Place the newspaper pattern in position over this, and with a hard, sharp pencil, firmly trace each line. If the material is sheer, this may be laid over the pattern, and the design drawn direct on the goods, as it will show through. When handled in this way, impression paper, of course, will not be required.

their hair was arranged and many other things that no one knows about but those who have studied their ways.

Then they would commence to ask their visitor questions, as they gradually got used to her nice way of praising all their little tidies and hand work which they had made. They would whisper to each other, but loud enough so that all could hear the things that were so complimentary about her appearance; but they would say to her, "Even with all these different things that you wear, you are very pretty, and we enjoy your visit."

During all this time the little boy was being admired and talked to by first one and then the other, for, being born there, he could speak the Chinese language, and so an hour or more would pass away very pleasantly.

Then the lady would propose that she tell them a story of something that happened many hundred years ago, which would at once be agreed to, as all Chinese are fond of stories, especially something about ancient times. So she would relate some very interesting Bible story, which they would listen to in perfect silence.

They would compliment her upon her ability as a story teller and ask questions about the story and insist that she must tell them another, which she would do. One of her objects would be to have them invite her to call on them again, so that in telling the last story, when it reached a very interesting part, she would remark that she did not have time to finish, for she must hurry to her own home. They then would insist that she return when she had the time and relate the rest of it, which she would agree to do. So arrangements would be made when she could call again to finish the story, and she was told to be sure and bring the boy. The next call would necessitate her returning to teach them how to make some tidy or finish some needlework that she must come back to finish, and so on until a cordial friendship was established and they felt free enough to come and call on her, but on these visits not even her husband could come into the house until they had gone.

MOTOR LUNCH KIT COMPLETE

OUR motor lunch kit, although homemade, is the most convenient and complete, as well as the least expensive, I have ever seen, writes a contributor to Good Housekeeping. We lined a small suit case with white oilcloth to which we sewed tapes at the right places to tie all contents down securely. In the lid are five small aluminum plates, one half dozen each of teaspoons, knives and forks in cotton flannel bags, a small carving knife, and a bottle brush.

The lower part contains, by careful fitting in, a quart ice cream mold, which we use as a sandwich case, one pint and one quart thermos bottles, a nest of eight drinking cups, and a small aluminum, alcohol stove, very compact, with a pan and small skillet. Into the little spaces between, we can put a small glass jar of butter, a thin can of cocoa, a glass of peanut butter or preserves, and a small oilskin case for tea towels.

We used this outfit at luncheon each day, for a week, during a trip through the White Mountains and found it most complete. Our menus included hot baked beans, hot canned corn, creamed dried beef, hot cocoa and tea, scrambled eggs, crab Newburg, etc. We bought milk, eggs, butter, bread and fruit en route.

It is worth while to add the white of an egg to the pot of chocolate.—Newark News.

PINS AND COMBS AGAIN POPULAR FOR LADIES' HAIR

Pins and combs have returned to style as hair decoration. This is because of the new shape that the coiffure now takes—the upward movement of the mass of hair at the back. To describe a coiffure of today is to say that there is no part of the hair that is a distinct protuberance from the rest, according to a New York Herald writer. There are no puffs, buns or braids. The waved tresses are draped and drawn together smoothly or interwoven in strands over the head, the ends tucked in under inconspicuously. Into this soft artistic mass are thrust the plain shell or jeweled combs or pins. This does not mean, however, that the hair forms a close cap on the head; it really makes a helmet shape, for at the back, toward the top, the hair stands away from the head, elongating the coiffure and giving the effect of a chignon without being one. The truth is the chignon is there, but it is built with part of the hair underneath before the last tresses are pulled over it, and this gives it the elongated helmet shape.

Pins and combs are really necessary to keep this mass of waved hair in place, and as the coiffure lacks decoration of any sort—curls, puffs or braids—the fancifully shaped combs and pins take the place of them.

Those for the evening headdress are in new shapes. Among them are the pins to stick in over the ears, the curved head part arranged in a peculiar manner to thrust the waved hair forward. If barrettes are used they are small and match the other hair ornaments.

QUICK CAKE

This cake can be put together and baked within three quarters of an hour, says the New Haven Journal Courier: One half cupful butter, one cupful brown sugar, two eggs, one half cupful milk, one and three quarters cupfuls flour, three teaspoonfuls baking powder, one half teaspoonful cinnamon, one half teaspoonful grated nutmeg, one half pound dates stoned and cut in pieces. Soften the butter and put all ingredients in a bowl. Beat together for three minutes. Bake 35 to 40 minutes.

FOR THE COOK

Yeast will stand longer than usual if a half teaspoonful of soda is put into it.

Apples and bananas fried in olive oil are far more delicate and appetizing than when fried in butter or other fat. Bacon fat is the next best thing.

If you mix cornstarch or flour with sugar before adding it to your pudding it will not be necessary to mix it with milk or water first.—Janessville Gazette.

BISQUE WARE

It was last year that there appeared the dainty baskets, jardinières, vases, pedestals and frames of the bisque, stained to simulate old ivory and usually having a touch of color in the tiny blossoms or empire wreaths which were wrought of the bisque, too. This year the display of these articles is increased in both variety and style, says the New York News. Mirrors are very effective framed in bisque ware.

NOVEL POLISHER

When cleaning pieces of silver with filigree work apply the cleanser with a soft old brush and polish with a small piece of velvet carpeting, says the Philadelphia Times. The pile of the carpeting sinks down among the chased work and cleanses and polishes it better than anything else, without scratching or injuring the silver.

WASH WICKER

Willow or wicker furniture should be washed, says the New Haven Journal Courier. If the furniture is varnished or painted with a high finish it should be washed in clear cold water. If it is stained with dull stain it can be washed in warm soapsuds.

The Mirror

BESIDES enabling us "to see ourselves as others see us," has a most attractive decorative value; and, in some sort, is an integral part of every well-appointed room.

Man has always wanted to view himself through his own eyes; and from Babylon, falling in love with his own reflection in the moon-lit pool, through the ancients, whose polished disks of metal gave birth to their own likenesses, down to our modest selves, there has existed an innate desire "to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature."

We moderns are fortunate in the infinite variety of designs open to our selection. The artists and artificers of the world have vied with each other to produce every beautiful or utilitarian conceit to please or satisfy the exacting purchaser; with the result that we have mirrors of suitable style, material and finish for every distinctive period or homely requisite. Our quaint three-piece Colonial mirror, so well adapted to the vacant wall space over mantel or sideboard, is only one of the many varied and acceptable creations we show in our large and carefully-selected stock of artistic and novel specialties, at consistent prices.

Deliberation Is Urged on Money Reform

Rules Committee Chairman Warns Against Wall Street as He Introduces Bill Giving Congress Powers Over Banks

SEEKS MORE INQUIRY

WASHINGTON—Introducing a bill to amend the banking laws so as to make banking associations subject to the visitatorial powers "exercised or directed" by Congress or by either House of Congress, Representative Henry of Texas, chairman of the powerful rules committee, Friday openly charged that Wall Street was back of the propaganda for currency legislation.

Mr. Henry insisted that further investigation of the so-called money trust should be immediately pressed. The Pujol committee, he declared, barely scratched the surface of the facts underlying the concentration of control of money and credit, because the controller of the currency refused access to his records, making it impossible for the investigators "to completely expose the existing relations between the Wall Street bankers and their allies with the trusts and monopolies, stock gamblers and financial conspirators."

"Wall Street bankers," he added, "now are demanding legislation on the currency question in order that they may make a market for their commercial paper (much of it based on poor securities) and have currency issued on their assets."

While this was going on it became known that the administration currency measure would be introduced in the House next Tuesday. President Wilson is expected to send a message on the subject, probably Tuesday.

"It is an imperative duty to pass currency legislation at this session of Congress," said Representative Carter Glass, chairman of the House banking and currency committee, Friday. "It seems singular to me that any well-informed member of Congress should imagine that the need is not urgent."

"If any such member will come to the banking and currency committee room and note the volume of correspondence on the subject with which the chairman has been deluged and the tenor of the letters written, he will become easily convinced not only that the bankers of the country favor legislation, but that business men of every description favor it, the latter even more urgently than the former."

Mr. Henry in his statement accompanying his bill declared "the Wall Street bankers, thinking the people confused and upset by tariff revision, have begun their old scheme of endeavoring to hurry through a plan giving them the right to issue or have issued by the government asset currency.

"There is positively at present no need," he says, "of an emergency currency bill; the Aldrich-Vreeland bill is on the statutes and has a year to live. It certainly suffices for that length of time."

"I am ready now for the right kind of currency legislation, but never for business to the banks and corporations and strips the government of its sovereign power."

SMITH ALUMNAE FESTIVITIES ARE MORE LIVELY THAN THEY USED TO BE

Trend of Recent Years Evident in Graduates' Parade Wherein Later Classes, in Fanciful or Grotesque Costumes, Do "Stunts" Giving Great Fun

NORTHAMPTON, Mass.—Smith alumnae, now back in unusually large numbers, and especially jubilant because of the victory for the million-dollar fund which is to put the college on a better footing with regard to salaries, have prepared to express their feelings in the alumnae parade next Monday morning.

This annual parade is still a rather new thing at Smith. The custom has grown up within the last five years. With increasing popularity of women's higher education has come some loosening of the cords of conventionality in connection with alumnae reunions and at this institution perhaps the results have been more apparent in this parade than elsewhere. Antics that have made great fun for participants and lively entertainment for spectators the last year or two have characterized sections in the line formed by later classes.

Earlier graduates have come to feel that their more dignified ways of doing things are somewhat out-of-date, but they are not much inclined to begin now to be frisky in their college activities. For the most part they confine their departure from the usual manners and dress to carrying bright-colored parasols or banners, wearing a special flower or to some other manifestation not expected to occasion thrills or outbursts of merriment, leaving the striking impressions to be made by the later comers who introduced the more modern customs.

In former years the only thing in the nature of a parade by the girls coming back was the alumnae procession to attend the commencement exercises, which tend the commencement exercises, which of course was an entirely dignified and somewhat formal affair contrasting strongly with the frolicsome item of the program which is expected to be so prominent a feature on Monday.

Just what the nature of the "stunts" of the various returning classes will be is kept for a series of surprises on the day itself, although it is believed that all previous years will be outdone. The classes have reunions here especially on the first, third, fifth, tenth, fifteenth, twentieth and twenty-fifth anniversaries of graduation, and while nearly every class since the institution was founded has been represented in the parades, the things of principal interest this year are expected from the classes indicated. It is known that the class of 1903 for some time has been preparing an act that is new to these occasions and is quite out of the ordinary in women's college processions.

The tendency of late years is toward the ways of celebrating at the men's colleges. Last year's parade gives a hint of at least what to look for to some extent at least on Monday. For instance, the class of 1911, back for the first time, had its members grouped by sections, all wearing special costumes alike, and carrying section banners, unmarried ones being indicated by a banner inscribed "Sunbeams in the Home"; another class comprising "Married Matrons," the engaged girls labeled as "Successful Sirens," and those who had taken up teaching as "Peevish Pedagogues." At the end of the 1911 division was carried a sign, "Trust 1912 to Copy This Next Year." Among the 1911 girls were two dressed somewhat like sandwich men who, hats in hand, collected contributions for the million-dollar fund, then in its early stages.

An original song has been written and memorized for those in this year's parade to sing.

It is now the custom of alumnae to come back for their first reunion in some special uniform costume, and this dress is maintained at following reunions for a few years, after which a different style is adopted by the class.

Last year an alumnae rally after the parade was made a feature, and it was such a success that another will be held next week. One feature of the occasion in 1912 was a showing of styles of women's dress since the opening of the college in 1875. Individual graduates presented themselves before their fellow alumnae wearing, in many instances, gowns worn at the time of their graduation, and with hair arranged according to the fashion of the earlier period.

The alumnae parade will take place next Monday morning, while the seniors are having their ivy procession, after which the alumnae will line up for the seniors to march through. The building will then go to the graduates holding for their rally, where the program will include "stunts" and speeches supposed to be funny. The increase in numbers in succeeding classes and the success of recent-year celebrations lead the graduates to expect a larger attendance than ever at this and other anniversary festivities of the present series.

One of the chief features on the alumnae calendar is the meeting on Tuesday afternoon in John M. Greene hall, when the president of the college, Dr. Marion LeRoy Burton, is to make announcements for the year.

TUFTS HOLDS ITS ALUMNI FIELD DAY EXERCISES

Graduates of Jackson Join in Sixth Celebration—Program of Athletic and Social Events

MEDFORD, Mass.—Commencement week events continue at Tufts and Jackson today with the celebration of the sixth annual alumni field day, for which an all-day program of athletic and social events has been arranged.

The members of the alumni registered between 8 and 9 o'clock this morning at Ballou Hall. Through the day many class reunions will be held ending with a general reunion of the alumni at the Boston City Club tonight.

Tomorrow afternoon the annual baccalaureate sermon will be preached in Goddard chapel by the Rev. Edwin C. Bolles, Dickinson professor of American and English history at Tufts during the past year.

The annual senior dance will be held Monday evening in the Goddard gymnasium, and commencement week will close with the commencement exercises next Wednesday, when all announcements of honors in the arts and science departments and engineering department will be made.

Nearly 12,000 persons witnessed the last class day in which Tufts and Jackson will unite yesterday and listen to the glee and mandolin clubs concert which took place on the steps of Barnum Museum in the evening. The concert was followed by a dance in Goddard gymnasium.

The "Hill" was decorated by nearly five miles of Japanese lanterns which were strung between the trees and buildings on the campus.

Y. M. C. A. PLANS LARGE ANNEX. NEW ORLEANS, La.—Officials of the Young Men's Christian Association are completing plans for an annex, which will contain the gymnasium and 40 additional rooms.

BERRIES IN THE BOSTON MARKET MUCH EARLIER THAN IN FORMER YEARS

Far in advance of the season of former years blackberries and blueberries at 20 cents a box have made their appearance in Boston markets during the past week. Gooseberries at 13 cents a box or two boxes for 25 cents, like rhubarb require much sugar in the cooking, but when made into preserves or pies are appetizing.

Now that strawberries have reached the period when the vendor's call of "Three boxes for a quarter" is not unusual, berries may be made into delicious drinks for the warm days by placing equal parts of strawberry juice, lemon juice and ice water in a glass with a few of the berries and slices of banana and sweetened to taste. Lime juice treated in a similar manner will be a welcome change from lemonade. Crushed strawberries frozen and served with whipped cream is a pleasant dessert, and strawberry whips are a boon to the hostess who has an unexpected guest to dinner, as they are so quickly made by placing half crushed berries in individual glasses with a little sugar and whipped cream to fill the glass. A single berry may be dropped on top of the cream to add a touch of color and decoration.

Vegetable Sandwiches

For the afternoon piazza table dainty sandwiches with a salad filling concocted of chopped cucumber, peppers, radishes or lettuce may be introduced, or cream cheese mixed with finely chopped olives, peppers and grated nuts. If cut into pretty shapes they make a particular appeal to the afternoon caller. Used in this way a 10-cent package of cream cheese will suffice for several occasions. Nuts, rice and macaroni prepared with various fruit combinations may take the place of meats for informal meals. All small quantities of vegetables left from the previous dinner can be utilized alone or together to make a salad. Vegetables, especially good for this season, string beans, beets, potatoes and asparagus. Turnips are now 5 cents a bunch, beets 8 cents a bunch, string beans 15 cents a quart, while lettuce, radishes and carrots remain the same.

Butter has dropped this week the tub butter being sold at 36 cents and the print butter at 37 cents a pound. Eggs are the same as last week at 32 to 35 cents a dozen.

The swordfish season is late this year owing to the cool weather. The swordfish are a local production but like the mackerel they disappear when the weather is severe. There is a temporary cessation of the halibut catch, the fish being sold Friday morning at 25 cents wholesale at the wharves. Neither has the usual Pacific coast product been received. Mackerel is plentiful at 13 to 35 cents apiece and lobsters are higher selling at 35 cents a pound. No lobsters are being found on the Massachusetts coast this season and but few in the Maine lobster beds.

Clams Plentiful

Now is the time for clambakes and chowder dinners. Clams are plentiful and reasonable in price. They may be served creamed on toast for luncheon, steamed as a dinner course and in fritters for breakfast. Butter fish at 12 and 15 cents a pound are another economical resource

CITY PLANNING BOARD IS URGED FOR PROVIDENCE

Many Citizens Attend Hearing and Advocate Commission to Superintend Growth and Laying Out of Municipality

TWO YEARS REQUIRED

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—A city planning commission to superintend the growth and laying out of the city was advocated at the public hearing held in the council chamber at city hall yesterday afternoon by the joint special committee investigating the need of a commission.

Representatives from several local organizations which have been lacking the movement for the establishment of a commission were present at the hearing and all spoke in favor of the scheme.

Arnold W. Bruner of New York, who is an expert on city planning, was present by invitation and explained in some detail the object of a commission.

Mr. Bruner said that a city plan did not mean a pretty city, but rather an efficient city.

"The city plan is not a beautiful map," he said. "It is hard work, it means changes in trolley schemes, sewer schemes, water systems and so on. The resultant beauty is only incidental."

"City planning is foresight and a profiting by past mistakes. It is a plan of operation, the scientific management of a city's growth."

In response to a question by Chairman Balch, Mr. Bruner said he had not studied this city for the possibilities it held for beautification. He did not know, he said, what the cost would be of the preliminary work necessary.

"How long would it take a commission to work out a plan?" asked Councilman Potter.

"At least two years, I should say," was the reply.

Foreign cities have thoroughly tested the city planning scheme, he said, and found it most successful. Germany, he said, was a leader in the movement, with England a close second.

He advised that any commission recommended be given only advisory powers, rather than veto powers, for the present at least.

The special board of inquiry is expected to file a report favoring the project.

MAINE TOWN TO HAVE PAGEANT
MACHIAS, Me.—This place will have a pageant August 5, 6 and 7. An elaborate program of historical episodes has been formulated.

ACADEMY ENDS COMMENCEMENT

ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt.—Commencement week at St. Johnsbury Academy ended Thursday night. The program of the week has been as follows:

Saturday night, principal's reception; Sunday, baccalaureate sermon by Pres. Guy Potter Benton of the University of Vermont; Tuesday night, annual concert by the academy chorus and other musical organizations; Wednesday afternoon, class day; Thursday evening, graduation with address by the Rev. Prof. Benjamin T. Marshal of Dartmouth, an alumnus of the school, followed by the alumni luncheon and at night by the senior promenade.

AUSTRIAN SHIPS TO VISIT PORTLAND

PORTLAND, Me.—Rumors that the Austro-American line would send its ships to Halifax instead of Portland next winter were denied in a message telegraphed here yesterday by the Express-Advertiser by R. F. Macfarlane, official of the company at Montreal. He wired:

"Last advice from Trieste shows the following sailings arranged from Portland to Trieste: Steamer Polonia leaves Portland Dec. 12 and the steamship Canada leaves Portland Jan. 9. Have no intimation of any change in service."

NEW COLLEGE CLUB TO OPEN

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Rooms of the Bear's Den, the newly incorporated Brown club, at 21 South Main street, will be opened tonight with an informal housewarming. An entire floor of the building has been leased, and all the rooms remodeled and furnished for the uses of the club.

MEDWAY WILL CELEBRATE BICENTENNIAL OF TOWN WITH HISTORIC PAGEANT

MEDWAY, Mass.—The forthcoming pageant, in which the towns of Medway, West Medway and Millis, formerly East Medway, unite, celebrates the two hundredth anniversary of the founding of the town of Medway, and will take place in a beautiful natural amphitheater on the banks of the Charles river. The episodes will begin with an allegorical dance original with Miss Lulu Donovan, who will create and arrange all the dances throughout the entire pageant. The program will be recited by Albert L. Saunders. The episodes and their characters are as follows:

The dances of the Indian myths and coming of the white men, Raymond V. Neelan; the attack on the palisade, Everett Caldwell; the four witches and the bad man, Alan Stevenson; a revolutionary episode, in charge of St. Anthony's Court Foresters, Thomas O'Donnell; Betsey Metcalf and the first straw bonnet, Medway Historical Society; the visit of Washington, Selma E. Pond; the Anticks and Horribles, Mrs. Fred Clark; the dance of the fire crackers, Udhahis Club; the singing school, J. Nash Ives, and the return of company E, Edward S. Woodman.

The costume is being done under the direction of Mrs. Annie E. Pond of West Medway and Mrs. Thomas O'Hara of Medway and Mrs. R. W. Mann of Millis. Many of the costumes are heirlooms. One attic alone yielded up nine hoop skirts. All the bonnets are being modeled on century-old bonnet blocks. The bonnet of Betsey Metcalf, the first ever made in America, is copied exactly from the original, now in the possession of the Rhode Island Historical Society. In another episode all the garments are fashioned after the styles in a contemporary Godey's Lady's Book. Over a dozen wool and flax wheels are to be in actual operation, ancient churns, shoemaking kits, and even baby carriages. Every effort is being made to make this pageant as accurate a transcription of the times as possible. The author and mistress of the pageant is Esther Willard Bates, author of "Pageants and Pageantry." J. Nash Ives is musical director and Dana Stanley has charge of the properties. Walter L. Palmer is chairman of the committee on grounds.

The entire celebration will last three days, two of which will be taken up by the pageant, and the last, Sunday, will have historical exercises at the old First church. A town history has just been published by Orion T. Mason. The bicentennial committee comprise Herbert N. Hixon, chairman; Orion T. Mason, secretary; William W. Ollendorff, treasurer; Robert O'Donnell, Walter L. Palmer, Melvin J. West, Evan F. Richardson and J. Allen Clark.

AMONG THE WOMEN'S CLUBS

Members of the Follen Study Club of East Lexington held their regular weekly study meeting Thursday evening in the reading room of Cary memorial library. The next regular meeting will be held June 19, while on July 3 the monthly business meeting and social is to take place at the home of one of the members.

The annual "field day" of the Littleton Woman's Club takes place Tuesday and plans are now being perfected to make the day one that will be enjoyable to all club members.

Ladies of the Arlington Heights Sunshine Club went to South Framingham Wednesday morning, where they spent the day at the farm of Mrs. Ralph R. Coggeshall. Mrs. Coggeshall's South Framingham club of women was also entertained on the same day by the hos-

tes. Next Wednesday afternoon the Sunshine Club will meet at the residence of Mrs. Goodwin at 3 Crescent Hill avenue, Arlington Heights, and the meeting will be in charge of the new president, Mrs. William E. Lloyd.

Mrs. William Cummings Story, president general of the National Daughters of the American Revolution, has appointed Mrs. Edward Harold Crosby, regent of the Lexington chapter, D. A. R., a member of the magazine committee of the National Society, D. A. R. At the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of Lexington this week, the vice-regent of the local chapter, Mrs. Boardman Hall of Boston and Lexington, represented the chapter.

The following committee has been appointed to have charge of the "lawn fete" to be held at "Pinchurst," the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Fisher Ames on North road, next Thursday, under the direction of the Bedford branch of the National Woman's Alliance: Mrs. Ross K. Whittier, chairman; Mrs. J. W. Elliott, Mrs. Fisher Ames, Mrs. Piper, Mrs. Griffin, Miss Ames, Miss Prince, Miss Bacon, Miss Hannah Pfeiffer, Miss Mary Parker, Miss Emily Hunnewell, Miss Mary Moulton, Miss Emily Christensen, Mrs. Charles Wood, Mrs. Roger Brown, Miss Elizabeth Wood and Miss Ames.

The annual business meeting and election of officers of the Dramatic Club of the Concord grange, Patrons of Husbandry, took place Tuesday evening at the home of Miss Grace L. Hunt on Thoreau street, Concord. The following officers were elected: President, Winslow Damon; vice-president, Miss Grace L. Hunt; secretary, Miss Clara Pettigrew, and treasurer, Miss Florence Whitney.

School Music Furnished by Pupils' Orchestras

IT WAS early this year that little girls of the Bowdoin school in Myrtle street in the West End, were organized into an orchestra by Miss Flora E. Billings, master's assistant. The orchestra has been a conspicuous feature in the school life, every girl in the school, down to the very youngest one, taking pride in it. It plays the opening hymn in the assembly hall on Monday morning, "Holy, Holy, Holy," or, "In Heavenly Love Abiding." Among its other selections are "Come Thou, Almighty King" and "Now that Daylight Fills the Sky." It plays patriotic selections also, marches to which all the children go in and out of the assembly hall, some of the music for folk dancing, tuneful selections from Flotow's "Martha," and Schumann's "Traumerei." The girls say they never before knew that music was so beautiful, and that they could play all day. And the little girls who do not play but only listen are glad to remain within earshot as long as the music goes on. At every meeting of the parents' association of the Dudley school in Roxbury the Dudley School orchestra plays. It plays also for the boys in marching in and out of the assembly hall for the exercises that are held there every Monday morning and sometimes contributes an additional number to the program. It has played in the evening at gatherings other than those of the school. The orchestra has been in existence many years. It is conducted by Leo Reisman, who graduated from the school two years ago and was a member of the orchestra when he was a pupil. A glee club was organized among the boys early last winter. Under the direction of Miss Maria E. Wood, a teacher, it has been busy practicing but has not yet undertaken to sing in public. It is preparing selections and is expected to appear before the whole school before long. The Warren School orchestra in Charlestown was organized this year by the submaster, James T. Donovan. It plays at the concert given at the school every Monday morning, sometimes accompanying the singing. The music is simple, as seems necessary at the beginning. Its selections include "Abide with Me," "Lead, Kindly Light," and patriotic airs. It is progressing to more difficult pieces as quickly as possible. The buglers sound the call for filing at recess and other times of the day.

In addition to its own orchestra of over 20 members the Lowell school in Jamaica Plain has an orchestral club of 45 members. This is an outgrowth of the orchestra itself and was organized last fall. It is composed of all the members of the present orchestra and who graduated last year but who wish to continue as players. They come in for practice and to help on special occasions that occur at hours when they are able to be present, as at the concert given on the last Wednesday evening in April. This was for the purpose of making money to buy new instruments. The orchestra likes to own what instruments it can and then lend them to pupils who are not ready to purchase their own but will learn to play if they have something to play on.

The parents and others in the neighborhood, and friends of the school elsewhere, are always glad to attend any performance where the orchestra is to play, for the children do good work, playing with skill and sympathy and confining their selections to compositions of merit. Works of Mozart, Haydn, Gounod, Offenbach and other masters of composition are in their repertoire.

The master of the school, William Lester Bates, and the submaster, Edward J. Cox, both are musicians and are interested in finding children in the school who have musical ability and in directing them in right channels for getting it. Two classes in violin, elementary and intermediate, are conducted for pupils out of school hours. Instruction is given free by an assistant director of music, Albert G. Mitchell, and a post-graduate of the school, Miss Louisa Rund, who herself derived so much benefit from the music work in the school she is glad to contribute her services for the help of others. Instruction in other instruments is given as needed by Mr. Bates or Mr. Cox.

Arrangements have been made with firms dealing in music instruments to let the children purchasing them pay for them in instalments. This has made it possible for a number who would otherwise be unable to do so to own instruments for themselves.

A graduate of the school had his taste for music so developed in the school orchestra that he is now supporting himself and progressing in his music playing in an orchestra in one of the big downtown hotels. Two girls in the present class have decided to continue their musical studies in Germany.

The orchestra plays a number of times each year outside of its own building. It sometimes plays for other schools, or gives programs in other school districts. It has played as a part of the program at the historical lectures at the Old South meeting house and on other occasions of importance. Last year it earned over $200, and expects to finish this year with an even better record.

Take your music with you

WHETHER you are an accomplished artist or play "just for the fun of it," you can add greatly to the pleasure of summer by taking along your favorite musical instrument. We carry all grades, but recommend for traveling and outdoor life the following instruments, of moderate price, but excellent in tone and quality:

Violins	$8, $10, $12, $15 and upwards
Mandolins	$10, $12, $15 and upwards
Guitars	$6, $8, $10, $12, $15 and upwards
Banjos	$8, $10, $15 and upwards

At all events buy our "Moisture-proof" and silk strings. They resist heat, dampness and perspiration—the ideal strings for summer. In addition to the instruments mentioned above, we carry a full line of music and musical merchandise.

You are invited to visit our salerooms, or write for catalogues.

GREAT GROWTH SHOWN IN AGRICULTURAL STUDY

WASHINGTON—Officials of the department of agriculture delight in pointing to the increase of interest in agricultural education in the United States during the past few years. Sixteen years ago not a high school in the land was teaching agriculture; at present the number is in excess of 2000. Sixteen years ago there were 61 state agricultural colleges and nine agricultural schools—or 70 institutions in all in which agriculture was taught; now agriculture is taught in about 2600 state and private colleges, public and private agricultural schools, and public and private high schools.

Dick J. Crosby, specialist in agricultural education in the office of experiment stations, notes that it has not extended over the whole of the 16-year period, but has been more marked in the last four years, and most rapid in the last two years. "Four years ago," says Mr. Crosby, "the agricultural education service of the office of experiment stations listed less than 350 institutions as teaching agriculture; two years ago, less than 900; now, about 2600. Between 1908 and 1910 the number of institutions teaching agriculture was practically doubled, and between 1910 and 1912 this number was trebled. And while 16 years ago, or even 10 years ago, the public high schools were hardly thought of as effective agencies for the education of the rural people along vocational lines, at the present time they constitute more than 80 per cent of the agencies engaged in teaching agriculture, not including, of course, the one-teacher elementary schools, which have never been listed by the department."

As Mr. Crosby points out, there are several types of secondary schools in which agriculture is taught. First in order of establishment and in value of agricultural equipment are the agricultural schools connected with state agricultural colleges, as in Minnesota and 30 other states. These schools use the land, live stock, farm equipment and laboratories of the agricultural colleges, and their classes are largely taught by professors and instructors in the agricultural colleges.

Secondly, there are the separate agricultural schools, which include county schools, like those in Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, North Carolina and Wisconsin; congressional district schools, as in Alabama and Georgia; judicial district schools, as in Oklahoma; and schools serving larger districts, sometimes a whole state, as in Arkansas, California, Colorado, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New York, Pennsylvania and Vermont. These schools have been established primarily for the purpose of teaching agriculture. The third type of school is the public school in which a department of agriculture has been established or a teacher of agriculture employed or an agricultural course conducted by a teacher with some agricultural training.

APPRAISERS VALUE ASTOR PROPERTY AT $88,000,000

Official Estimate of Estate and Portions That Go to Heirs and Legatees Made Public—Son Vincent Will Have $68,964,499—Fart of Tax to Be Rebated

NEW YORK—Official appraisal of the estate of Col. John Jacob Astor made public Friday, discloses a property of approximately $88,000,000. From this amount Vincent Astor receives $68,964,499; Mrs. Madeline Force Astor, $7,678,896; Muriel Astor, $4,856,738, and John Jacob Astor, son by the second marriage, $2,922,672.

In connection with the appraisal is presented an affidavit of the examiners that the property embraced in the ante-nuptial agreement for Mrs. Ava Willing Astor, amounting to about $1,738,030, which was to have reverted to her, goes to Vincent Astor. The reason given is that Mrs. Astor having divorced her husband was never his widow. The legal widow is Mrs. Madeline Force Astor.

The estate paid to the state $3,150,000 in October, 1912, as its inheritance tax, and is to be allowed a 3 per cent rebate on this sum.

The appraisers valued the real estate at about $63,100,000 and the personal property at nearly $25,000,000.

STRIKE BENEFITS PAID

Strike benefits of $8 to married and $5 to single men will be paid to the striking employees of the Sturtevant Blower and the Becker Machine plants at Hyde Park beginning next Tuesday. Financial assistance was given to several strikers yesterday. About 500 strikers met in French's opera house yesterday, and were addressed by strike leaders.

Portrait May Serve to Decorate the Home

Both Artist and Sitter May Help to Meet Natural Requirement in This Respect so Frequently Overlooked at Present Time

LIKENESS NOT ENOUGH

NEW YORK—A portrait fails to fulfill its possibilities, if it stops at being a likeness. Intended in almost all cases for the embellishment of the home, a portrait may properly be required to decorate the home. Yet this very natural requirement is honored as often in the breach as in the observance. This is the fault both of the sitter and of the artist.

Mrs. Blank, having determined to have a portrait painted and being attracted by the competent work of some painter, goes to the artist's studio. Mrs. Blank would like a portrait of such and such a size. It will cost so much. The arrangements are made, the pose is agreed upon, and the artist falls to work. A portrait is produced. The likeness is satisfactory. Mrs. Blank is pleased. The picture is taken from the artist's studio, framed, and goes to the purchaser's home, where it is hung, in a good light, upon the wall, with other framed paintings. It is a portrait of Mrs. Blank, by So-and-So, an entirely creditable piece of work.

Yet, how about that space over the mantelpiece in the reception hall of Mrs. Blank's spacious house? Could not the portrait have been made to fit and to decorate that space and to harmonize with and enrich its surroundings, and still have been as much of a portrait? Were there no panels in the ivory and gold music room which portraits painted with artistic consideration of their intended surroundings, might happily embellish?

In the multitude of large houses that are being erected both in town and country, but especially in the country, there are wall spaces where the large portrait group might well be shown. As the country house offers space for proper setting of such pictures, so the country life of today, with its gardens, its animals, its outdoor sports and costumes, is rich in incidents and accessories for the portrait artist. A portrait or portrait group may be characterized by successful likeness and be a balanced composition. It may have decorative value. In its accessories, it may contain much that is pleasantly intimate in the life of those it presents, and, on account of each of these things, will be a better and therefore a more permanent work of art.

The portrait work of the old English and Dutch masters shows that they conceived of it in the relation it would have to its surroundings. With what added beauty do some of the Dutch portraits look out from the identical places where they first were hung years ago.

The trouble seems to be that both painter and painted are in too much of a hurry to give this aspect of portrait painting the attention it deserves. Time is too short, art too long. But of this there is no doubt: There are a number of American painters who already have shown that the portrait or the portrait group may be a thing of significant beauty in itself, as a picture.

Symons, Wendt, Ritschell

A wonderful illusion is Gardner Symons' "Where the Brook and River Meet," hanging in the gallery of the National Arts Club, on East Nineteenth street. Can the power of paint to realize an aspect of nature go any further? The turbid flow of the water is rendered with absolute certainty. There are both surface and depth to the water flowing in the foreground of the picture. The simplified forms of the earth melt into one another as they reach away up the little river valley and into the picture. There is nothing that needs to be added to this landscape. There is nothing that could well be left out.

William Wendt, some of whose California landscapes are shown in the same exhibition, sees landscape in its "bigness" but finds also poetry, gaiety and decoration. The composition of Mr. Wendt's pictures is a delight. Do landscapes in California really grow that way, all ready for the painter's brush? If they do, Congress might be petitioned to set aside California as a landscape preserve specially for artists for all time. Mr. Wendt is not the first to know the poetry of tall, straight tree trunks, but he is one of those who show it best. "The Lake," "The Ravine," "The Glen," "The Valley of Heart's Delight," and the prize-taking "Mount San Antonio" are among Mr. Wendt's pictures shown.

Ritschell. His "Hopi Indian Land" is a vast, shadowed, silent plain from which emerges the figure of a mounted Indian leading a burro. His "Hour of Mystery" shows the moonlight upon the unearthly rock forms of the Grand canyon. His "Place of Silence" is a deep, dark mountain recess by the water's edge, where the stillness has been centuries long. Very different is the artist's "Winter Morning, East River." Here the docks for ecclesiastical ornamentation, painted stained glass came into use later for the decoration of houses, and the work now being shown was painted by the original Cottier, founder of the house of Cottier & Co., for house decoration. There are panels for doors, windows, transoms and other lights. Particularly interesting as decoration where a "spot of color" is wanted are the transoms lights showing flowers, poppies, sunsent with Japanese directness. "The Passing Cloud" shows a vast cloud structure gathering to itself whatever of light the night affords, as it passes over a deeply stirred sea.

A changing and always interesting exhibition of pictures by American painters is in the Macbeth galleries, 450 Fifth avenue. Here is a strong distinctly seen "New Hampshire Village" by W. L. Metcalf. The hamlet, with its two

VALUE OTHER THAN SENTIMENT IS APPARENT

A portrait painting by John C. Johansen latent with possibilities for decorative use troop along the river with its shipping, the suspension bridge swings overhead to the city beyond, just breaking through its mists. This picture of the city is more powerful and even wilder than those of the canyon and the desert plain.

In this unusually even collection of pictures there are also strong paintings

Subject Is Suitable to Adorn Walls of a Large Town or Country House

Portrait group by George DeForest Brush in the Metropolitan Museum, New York

by Guy C. Wiggins, Gifford Beal, Hayley Lever (a picture of Washington bridge), Clara McChesney, Henry Salem Hubbell and Ernest L. Ipsen.

The old art of stained glass painting is having a showing at Cottier's, 3 East Fortieth street. Employed originally flowers and roses,—in naturalistic treatment.

Daniel Cottier was a French Huguenot, born in the Isle of Man, and learned to paint stained glass in Glasgow. The painting of glass led up to the business of decorating and this again broadened to include picture dealing. Cottier & Co. have been in New York since 1871. The movement of water and the mystery of night charm the beholder in three canvases by Leon Dabo, at Cottier's. In "Leonia island" the water of a broad river ripples away into the deep night lighted only by the lamps of a distant and invisible island. "The Breaker" is a gray-toned picture of sea and sky pre-churches showing fine old spires, lies in the middle distance, glittering in the sun against a blackground of a tall hill. A landscape of luminous quality is by Sophie Brennan. Chauncey F. Ryder's "Connecticut River Farm" is quietly beautiful in tone. "Eight o'clock" is by Lawrence Mazzanovich. It is the hour when the light of a leisurely winter morning comes creeping into the woods. The William A. Spencer collection of modern French bindings, 201 volumes in all, a bequest to the public library, is shown in part in the library's exhibition room. There are bindings by Marius Michel, Joly, Canape and Mercier, as other French binders and also several

WESTON TOWN CRIER TO OPEN ANNIVERSARY

WESTON, Mass.—Opening the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of Weston, the town crier, Robert H. Clark, will read a proclamation in the village square at 9:45 o'clock Sunday morning.

Anniversary services will be held in all the churches tomorrow morning. In the afternoon at 4 o'clock a union service will be held in the tent on the high school grounds, with an address by the Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, and with music by a chorus of 70 voices, accompanied by an orchestra.

On Monday morning there will be athletic sports and a baseball game on the estate of Robert Winsor. A historical pageant will be represented in the afternoon at 3 o'clock on Mr. Winsor's estate, about 300 of the town's residents taking part in a drama written and directed by Joseph Lindon Smith.

A parade of the pageanters, floats of the business men and decorated automobiles will take place over the principal streets Tuesday morning. A children's entertainment in the tent on the high school grounds, band concerts, historical exercises, fireworks and a reception and dance are in the program of the day. At the historical exercises in the tent, the address will be delivered by Samuel C. Bennett.

On both Monday and Tuesday there will be all day exhibits of school work in the high school building, and an historical loan exhibit at the house of the Misses Jones in the village square.

Three rooms of this house, which was originally the old Smith tavern, have been restored to their original condition as in revolutionary times, and contain furniture used in the town during that period. Alfred L. Cutting is chairman of the general committee in charge of the celebration and he is assisted by Arthur L. Coburn, Edward B. Field, David W. Lane and Andrew Fiske, secretary.

WOMEN APPLAUD SUFFRAGE GAINS

Resolutions were adopted expressing satisfaction at the recent developments in Norway and Illinois in the cause of woman suffrage at the meeting of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association, 585 Boylston street, yesterday.

Miss Alice Stone Blackwell presided, and Mrs. Maud Wood Park pointed out that at the next presidential election the 29 votes of Illinois in the electoral college will be added to the 53 from the suffrage states of California, Washington, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Oregon and Kansas.

The action of the Norwegian Parliament in extending full suffrage to all women of Norway was hailed as a triumph.

George Inness' "Winter Morning—Montclair, New Jersey" hangs in the Holland gallery at Forty-second street and Fifth avenue. In this canvas the artist has invested a homely scene with beauty of his own perception. The smoke of the railroad train puffing through the middle distance, and the day's washing, which the two women are beginning to hang on the clothesline to dry, are transformed into the very poetry of color by Inness' brush. No doubt it was the glorious light on the drying clothes that caught the artist's eye as he glanced from his window and led him to paint this picture.

SENATE TO GET REVISED TARIFF BILL BY JUNE 25

Chairman Simmons and Democratic Leaders Expect to Have Measure Ready for Action in Caucus by Next Wednesday

FREE PAPER IS VOTED

WASHINGTON—An end to the Senate finance committee's work on the tariff measure by next Wednesday, immediate call of a Democratic caucus and submission of the bill to the Senate by the following Wednesday, is the program today of the Democratic leaders.

Amending the section of the Underwood tariff bill which would place on the free list all print paper valued at not more than 2½ cents a pound, the majority members of the Senate finance committee Friday voted to incorporate in the bill the provision of the Canadian reciprocity bill passed in 1911.

This action would extend the free list to include all print paper valued at not more than 4 cents a pound on the condition "that no export duty, export license fee or other export charge of any kind whatsoever, or any prohibition or restriction in any way of the exportation, shall have been imposed upon such paper, board or wood pulp, or the wood pulp used in the manufacture of such paper or board."

Although the word "Canada" is omitted from the amendment adopted, it would operate against Canada because of that nation's restrictions on exports of wood and chemical pulp. Senator Simmons, chairman of the finance committee, said that other restrictive provisions or countervailing duties aimed against Canada which have been proposed had not yet been acted upon by the majority, and that the matter would be taken up again today. He added that there might be reconsideration of the action thus far taken.

Under the reciprocity amendment, pulp wood or paper could come in free from Canada when it is the product of free lands in Canada, lands unrestricted by export duty or license fee.

ART MUSEUM NOTES

A list of city busts and bas-reliefs has been added to the report of the registry of the Museum of Fine Arts, which has been prepared for the art department, and is soon to be issued. The list of city monuments and city pictures, included in the reports for 1911 and 1912, will also form part of the current report. Among the busts listed are those of chief justices in the court house, those of representative noted citizens and men of letters in the public library and that of John Adams in Faneuil hall. Among the bas-reliefs are those in the public library, the court house and the mayor's office. In the course of preparing this list the registry has made an inventory of plaster reproductions of sculpture preserved in city buildings. These are mostly in the schools, nearly one third of the city schools being so decorated.

A supplement to the list records several works in marble and bronze not included in the 1911 report, the chief being the statues of Science and Art that stand on the public library steps and the statue of Dr. Edward Everett Hale in the Public Garden, all the work of Bela L. Pratt.

LOAN EXHIBIT AT NEW ORLEANS INCLUDES 300 OIL PAINTINGS

NEW ORLEANS—With nearly 300 oil paintings, drawings, etchings and engravings, some of which are from the brushes of masters of art, the loan exhibit now open to the public at the Isaac Delgado museum of art is said to contain the most valuable collection ever exhibited at any one time in the history of the city.

Aside from the portraits numbered in the catalogue prepared by Curator C. W. Boyle the collection contains four pictures from Van Roy, the set giving an idea of the Belgian school of painting. The four pictures were received in New Orleans recently by a brother of the artist, who is engaged as a musician in the Tulane orchestra, and were loaned by the latter to the museum.

"Symphony in Blue" is the subject of the first picture, which represents the figure of a beautiful woman, standing in meditation. "La Toilette" is the subject of the second painting. This picture is said to be one of the valuable assets of the present exhibit. The other Van Roy paintings represent, the one an old geographer at study over a map of the globe and an atlas, and the other a basket of assorted fruits.

"A Frozen River," from the brush of Charles Rosen, recently purchased for the permanent collection out of the pay admission fund, occupies a prominent position in what is known as the modern impressionism gallery, on the second floor of the museum.

In the same gallery are shown: "On the Rocks After the Storm," by Augustus Koopman, donated by the Art Association of New Orleans; "Snow and Flood in Flanders," by Modest Huys, donated by the Quarante Club of New Orleans; "Morning on Bayou Boeuf, La.," by Charles W. Boyle, donated by the Home Institute Alumnae; "Myrtingen, Suisse," by George D'Espagnat, donated by two friends of the museum, and "Port Nant-Belle Isle en Mer," donated by Durand-Ruel & Sons of Paris.

Another noted painting now on exhibition is the "Last Will," by Gisbert-Flugans. It was loaned by the owner, Miss Medora Ross, who is said to have recently refused an offer of $5000 for it.

The present loan exhibit is growing daily in popularity, judging from the large number of visitors which it has attracted, not only from the city, but artists and lovers of art have freely contributed to the collection, among the most liberal contributors being Dr. I. M. Cline. Curator W. C. Boyle stated that the present exhibit would continue for some time, when arrangements would be made for other exhibits next fall.

Corset Dept.—4th Floor

We extend a cordial invitation to mothers and their daughters to attend the demonstration of this well-known corset. An expert designer and fitter will be at your service and will gladly help and advise you in your selection.

"H. & W." Corset Waists. These Corset Waists were originally intended for growing girls and misses who felt the need of giving thought to the maturing figure—girls who were too young to wear stiff corsets—but as the Corset Waist business developed, these same Misses were loath to give up such satisfactory and comfortable dress. In order to do the regulation corset. That fact set the makers, and the women, too, to thinking, with the result that today there are as many grown women who wear Corset Waists as there are girls.

"H. & W." Waists for Young Ladies. The selection of the First Corset should be carefully made and it should be SKILFULLY FITTED, giving attention to the growing figure.

We have in our special dept. Corsets for girls and misses—The illustration shows one of our most dependable models—the "College Girl" cut low for slender figures.

Bay State Automobile Association Selects Last Year's Stopping Place in New Hampshire for the Season's Outing

MANY MEMBERS TO GO

According to W. H. Stevens, chairman of the runs and tours committee of the Bay State Automobile Association, something like 40 cars, carrying about 175 members and friends will leave this city tomorrow in time to gather for the night at Lake Spofford, N. H., where the annual outing of the association will be held on Monday and Tuesday of next week. Lake Spofford was the spot selected for the outing of the association last year, and the majority of the members who made the trip are unanimous in the opinion that no better place for an outing can be chosen.

One feature of this tour that makes the trip unusually enjoyable is the fact that the roads to Lake Spofford are good, and more than half the distance is covered by state roads. The members will gather at the Pine Grove Springs hotel, where they will stay during the outing. The hotel is situated in the midst of a large pine grove on the edge of the lake, and there are plenty of opportunities for the guests to enjoy themselves. Aside from the walks and drives, and the magnificent mountain scenery, there is golf, tennis, bathing, boating, baseball and other sports for those who go in for athletics.

Most of the members plan to gather Sunday night, and will remain until after lunch on Tuesday, but for the benefit of those members as care to start the outing Saturday night, arrangements have been made with the management of the hotel to accommodate them.

USE CARE WHEN ADJUSTING THE CARBURETOR

W. H. Stewart, Jr., Explains Various Types, Their Characteristics and Reasons for the Disorders and Their Remedy

NOTE MOTOR ACTION

"Carburetors using an adjustable nozzle and a main air passage only are used on very small cars," states W. H. Stewart, Jr. "In this case the needle valve is to be opened one complete turn, and the motor should be started with the throttle one quarter open. The engine must run slowly, and the needle valve be adjusted to the point at which it runs fastest for that position of the throttle.

"To adjust carburetors using one adjustable nozzle and an auxiliary air valve with a single spring, the needle must be opened one quarter turn, with the air valve seated. The engine must then be started. After the spark is properly advanced, slow down the engine and adjust the needle valve for very low speed until the engine runs smoothly. Then the throttle must be open wide to note the action of the motor.

"Should the engine have a tendency to speed up and then backfire and stop, too much air is being supplied by the air valve. To remedy this, the tension on the valve spring must be increased until the maximum speed of the engine is obtained. But should it be found that in order to obtain this high speed it has reduced the travel of the valve to about an eighth of an inch, a spring with a slightly greater tension will be required. If upon opening the throttle the engine increases the speed, but gallops, and the exhaust sounds very heavy, the spring tension must be diminished to admit a greater amount of air. Upon several occasions it has been found that the spring in the air valves must be loosened so much that the air valve does not seat at low speed, but in a case of this sort a spring with a lesser tension must be used.

"To adjust carburetors using one adjustable jet and an auxiliary air valve with two springs, the air valve must be seated properly, and then the needle valve must be given a 1/4 turn, starting the engine and adjusting the needle valve for low speed until the engine runs fastest for that position of the throttle. The throttle must then be opened a little over a quarter, adjusting the weaker spring until the engine runs smoothly. However, should it be found necessary to weaken the spring so much that the air valve does not seat when the throttle is closed, a spring with a greater tension will be required before the engine will run at low speed. When the intermediate adjustment is finished the throttle must be opened wide, to notice the action of the engine. The spring may have to be changed, but the rule is the same as in previous cases."

MOTORCYCLE NOTES

A feature of the Fourth of July celebration at Anderson, Ind., will be a program of motor cycle races at the park.

The Germans have been experimenting with a motor cycle quick-firing gun designed to repel approaching air ships.

The industrial commission of Washington state has purchased three motor cycles for the use of its field workers in the industrial insurance department. One of these machines will be used in Seattle, one in Wenatchee and the third in Spokane.

Not only motor cyclists all over the country are planning to attend the F. A. M. convention which will be held in Denver July 23-26, but hundreds of autoists are planning to accompany the Motorcyclists on their cross-country tour to the convention city.

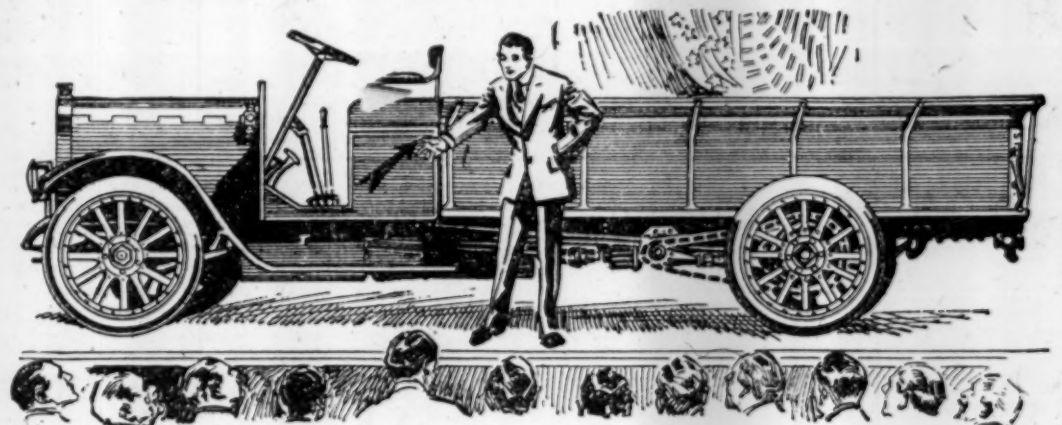

L. W. Whitehurst of Plant City, Fla., has covered 2100 miles of his 18,000-mile motorcycle trip from Tampa to San Francisco, by way of Portland, Me. Mr. Whitehurst is carrying his own camping outfit, preparing his meals by the roadside and sleeping under a tent at night. He expects to spend about five months touring the country a wheel.

The next state F. A. M. convention to be held is the Ohio meet, June 20-22, at Cleveland. An interesting program is being prepared, and a large attendance is expected. Five tours from various points in the state will enter Cleveland. At this meeting the trophy will be presented to the Cleveland Motorcycle Club, which the club won by giving to J. Leo Sauer, on his transcontinental lecture tour, the largest number of new memberships of any club.

MOTORCYCLISTS EXPECT LARGE ATTENDANCE

Reports Indicate Biggest Assemblage at This Year's Convention in Denver Ever Known by the Federation

MANY TOURS PLANNED

DENVER, Col.—From the present indications the combined tours which will center in this city for the coming national convention of the Federation of American Motorcyclists, July 23-26, will constitute the greatest assemblage of this character in all the history of motor-cycling.

At this time it is impossible to figure definitely just how many motorcyclists will participate in the tours, but from the early reports from the various tourmasters it seems certain that all numerical records will be broken.

One reason for this, perhaps, is the fact that Denver is proving an attractive convention city, because of its location. More and more every year motorcyclists are forming the habit of making long tours during the summer months and Denver, with the added inducements of the convention and the organized tours is proving an attractive goal for the 1913 season. Many motorcyclists are making their plans to join one of the many tours centering in Denver for the national meeting, thus taking advantage of the convention program and entertainment, the convenience and sociability of an organized company of tourists, and the fine scenery which will be enjoyed en route.

Among the tours already mapped out are: Indianapolis tour, through St. Louis and Kansas City; O. F. McLain, tourmaster; tour from Chicago west to Omaha, Jess Campbell, tourmaster; Nebraska tour, with Dr. B. C. Wildman of Havelock as tourmaster; the South Dakota tour, in charge of Albert Wooley and the short grass tour in charge of P. E. Zimmerman of Lindsborg, Kan. There will also be a tour from the Pacific coast.

It will not be necessary for the riders to carry any excess baggage, as Secretary G. B. Gibson will establish an office at the official hotel where all baggage expressed to him will be taken care of until called for.

AUTO DEALERS ELECT

The Boston Automobile Dealers Association, Inc., held its annual meeting last week and elected the following officers for the current year: J. H. MacAlman, president; J. H. Hathaway, vice-president; F. A. Hinchcliffe, treasurer; Chester I. Campbell, secretary; J. H. MacAlman, J. S. Hathaway, F. E. Wing, C. E. Fay, J. W. Bowerman, E. A. Gilmore, F. A. Hinchcliffe, C. P. Rockwell and J. W. Maguire, directors. The past year has been a very successful one with the association.

TO SEE IF WHEELS ARE PARALLEL

To ascertain if the steering wheels are parallel an easy way is to jack up a little wheel, paint the treads with a little whitewash, and while this is wet set the wheels going at a good speed. Two thin white lines will in this way be thrown on the floor in front of the car, and it is then a very easy matter to see if these lines are parallel.

STORE NEWS

Walter A. London, buyer of leather goods, and George Snyder, buyer of stationery for the Jordan Marsh Company, who sailed for European markets on April 28, are en route for America and are expected to arrive in Boston the first of the week.

Albert Ricker of the William Filene's Sons Company and managing editor of the Echo, published by the cooperative association of that store, starting on a two weeks' vacation today. During his absence he will attend the commencement exercises of his alma mater, Dartmouth.

Vacation arrangements are completed for the employees of the Magrane-Houston Company and a large number of the girls are arranging to go to a camp in New Hampshire.

Boston buyers who are in New York this week include P. A. O'Connell, president of the E. T. Slattery Company; P. D. Slocum of the R. H. White Company; Mrs. E. A. Mallee of the Henry Siegel Company; A. P. Dupuis of the William Filene's Sons Company and Miss M. E. Barrett of the Magrane Houston Company.

ALL-AMERICAN FASHIONS SHOWN

NEW YORK—In the McAlpin is shown what is called the "first exhibit of American fashions for American women held for the manufacturing trade." It is attended by hundreds of dressmakers and cloak and suit makers. It is said that all the dresses, coats, suits and waists shown are original models made by Americans and with one or two exceptions they are made of American material, even to the buttons. The object of this exhibit is to show that both the styles and the materials produced are as satisfactory in every way as those from abroad and is held in support of the movement for "American fashions for American women." Each model was announced from the stage as she started out on her promenade through the aisles, together with the name of the dressmaker and the manufacturer of each material used in the construction of it.

PANAMA RAILROAD FUTURE DISCUSSED

WASHINGTON—Secretary of War Garrison and Colonel Goethals, chief engineer of the Panama canal, conferred today regarding the operation of the Canal Zone railroad after the opening of the canal. The part the railroad shall play in transportation of freight after ships compete with it was discussed.

Disposition of the canal-making machinery after the project is completed was also discussed. Increase in wages of several classes of canal employees were decided upon at today's conference.

SEVERAL REASONS WHY AUTOMOBILE MOTORS OVERHEAT

One of Them Is the Clogging of the Circulating System at Some Point or Other

One of them is the clogging of the circulating system at some point or other. There are several reasons why automobile motors overheat, says William H. Stewart, Jr. It may be due to the circulating system being clogged at some point, preventing the free circulation of water. The obstruction may be in the radiator itself, in the water pump or in the hose connections. It is not unusual for a piece of solder to clog the main water outlet at the base of the radiator.

It is also possible that the propeller of the pump has become loosened on the shaft, and as a result does not throw the water. If the water hose connections have been on for some time, the inner walls may have become softened and swollen. The external surface of the hose will appear in good condition, while the inner walls have decayed, and in swelling prevent the passage of the water.

It is not difficult to locate the obstruction in the water lines. By removing the hose connection between the radiator and the top of the cylinder one can very readily tell whether the pump is working or not. If the water is not forcibly thrown from the upper connection it is evident that the pump itself is not working, or that there is an obstruction between the pump and the part above the pump and leading to the cylinders one can very readily tell whether the trouble lies in the pump itself. Again, the trouble may be traced back in the lower connection at the water.

RAILWAY RIGHT IS GRANTED

LOS ANGELES—Permission has been given by the state railroad commission to the Pacific Electric Railway Company to construct the double track railroad along San Pedro street at grade across intersecting streets and railroad tracks between Aliso and Ninth streets. The railway company now will proceed with the work of construction, which, when completed, will form the first link of the proposed municipal railroad to the harbor.

AUTOMOBILE NOTES

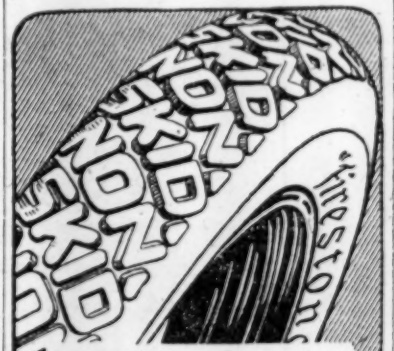

With a record entry list, the interclub reliability road tour between the motorists of the Chicago Automobile Club and the Chicago Athletic Association started at Chicago today. At noon the tourists had reached Lake Geneva, Wis., the noon control. They expect to reach Ft. Wayne, Ind., tonight and return by way of Harvard, Ill., the second day noon control, tomorrow evening.

The committee appointed by the Dalhart, Tex., Commercial Club to view the Denver-to-Gulf automobile way, between Dalhart and Raton, N. M., a distance of 140 miles, have returned after meeting with the commercial clubs of the cities along the route and receiving assurances that the entire road will be in good shape for summer tourists.

Through the efforts of the Bristol-to-Washington Highway Association, a stone road will be constructed between Bristol, Pa., and Abingdon, a distance of 15 miles. The supervisors intend to extend this road to connect with Smyth county's link of the proposed Bristol-to-Washington highway.

One of the chief duties of drivers of motor trucks is to see that their trucks are not subjected to the abuses of overloading and overspeeding.

A motorist who buys one of the light, handy and efficient automobiles of today is often amazed at the care and attention he finds he has purchased along with his car. More and more, manufacturers have come to realize that lasting sales success is based on the prestige of their cars in the hands of owner-drivers. Skilful service is used increasingly as a sales argument by dealers and often, for long periods, no charge is made for the minor adjustments and skilled advice given a novice.

STYLE IN AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE

Impulses Seen Stirring in Structural Alembic to Produce from Many Present Followings a Form Typifying National Character

THE various followings in architecture today are so many and manifest that he who runs may read. One is minded, therefore, to say less about style and styles and half a style than of the impulse—or the impulses, for they are legion—behind them, and of the goal to which in various ways they are all tending.

Chaos is the only word that one can justly apply to the quaint and inconsequent conceits in which we have indulged since that monumental moment in the early nineteenth century, when, architecturally, all that has been since the beginning ceased, and that which had never been before on land or sea began.

Retrospection carries us back to the decade between 1820 and 1830, and there we find a reasonably firm foothold. Here, at last, at the beginning of the century, we discover actual unanimity, and with some relief we go back century after century, tracing variations, but discovering no precedent for the chaos we have left.

We all know what our own colonial was like; perhaps we do not fully realize how varied it was as between one section and another, but at least we appreciate its simplicity and directness, its honesty, its native refinement and delicacy, its frequent originality. It isn't the same as English Georgian; sometimes it is distinctly better, and, however humble or colloquial, it is marked always by extreme good taste. If anything, it improved during the almost two centuries of colonial growth, and when the nineteenth century opened it was still instinct with life. A half century later where were we? Remember 1850, and all that date connotes of structural dishonesty, stylistic barbarism, and general ugliness! Here is the debatable period, and we may narrow it; for in 1810 and in 1820, good work was still being done, while in 1840, yes, in 1830, the sudden savagery diluted with shameless artifice was widely prevalent.

To me, this decade between 1820 and 1830 is one of the great moments in architectural history, for then the last flicker of instinctive art amongst men died away, and a new period came in.

Transition Period

Eighteen hundred and ninety, and we start again. Two tendencies are clear and explicit. A new and revived classic with McKim as its protagonist, and a new Gothic. The first splits up at once into three lines of development: pure classic, beaux arts, and colonial—each vital, brilliant and beautiful in varying degrees. The second was and remains more or less one, a taking over of the late Gothic of England and prolonging it into new fields, sometimes into new beauties.

And now two new elements enter, steel frame construction on the one hand and on the other the secessionist. The steel frame is the enfant terrible of architecture, but like so many of the genus it may grow up to be a serious-minded citizen and a good father. It isn't that now, it is a menace, not only to architecture but to society; but it is young and it is having its fling. If we can make it realize that it is a new force, not a substitute, we shall do well. When it contents itself in its own sphere and the municipality says kindly but firmly, "thus far and no further"—the "thus far" being about 125 feet above street level, as in the very wise town of Boston—then it may be a good servant. Like all good servants it makes the worst possible master; and when it claims as its chief virtue that it enables us to reproduce the baths at Caracalla, vaults and all, at half the price, or build a second Chartres cathedral with no danger from thrusting arches, and with flying buttresses that may be content beautifully to exist, since they will have no other work to do, then it is time to call a halt. The foundation of good architecture is structural integrity; and it doesn't matter how beautiful a building is, if its columns merely hide the working steel within, if its vast vaults are plaster on steel frame and expanded metal, then it isn't architecture. It is scene painting, and it takes its place with the other scene painting of the later renaissance to which we mistakenly apply the name of architecture.

The secessionist—one might sometimes call him post-impressionist, cubist even—is the latest element to be introduced, and in some ways he is the most interesting. Unlike his confreres in Germany, Spain, and Scandinavia, he shows himself little except in minor domestic work—for at heart we are a conservative race, whatever individuals may be—but here he is stimulating. His habitat seems to be Chicago and the Pacific coast; his governing conviction a strongly developed enmity to archaeological forms of any kind. Some of the little houses of the middle West are striking, quite novel, and inordinately clever; some of the work on the Pacific coast, particularly around Pasadena, is exquisite, no less. Out of the interplay of these two tendencies, much of value may arise.

Present Situation

And there you are: three kinds of classic, two kinds of Gothic, skeleton-frame, and secessionist—all are operative today, each with its strongly following, each, one admits, unconsciously clever and improving every day; for there is no architectural retrogression in America, there is steady and startling advance, not only in facility for handling and developing styles, but in that far more important affair, recognition of the fact that style matters far less than style. From a purely professional standpoint the most encouraging thing is the breadth of culture, the philosophical insight into the essence of things, the liberality of judgment that mark so many of the architectural profession today. All have found out that architecture is much bigger than its forms, that the fundamental laws are the same for all good styles, and that the things that count are structural integrity, good taste, restraint, vision, and significance. No one now would claim with the clangor of triumphs that the day of victory was about to dawn for the beaux arts, Gothic, or steel-frame

Treating American architecture from the viewpoint of a present developing stage, Ralph Adams Cram analyzes the impulses that lie behind construction and its tendency, in the Yale Review for July. The subject is of no little current importance, especially in relation to steel frame construction. Subjoined extracts from his paper, which was given originally as an address before the Contemporary Club of Philadelphia, represent how thoughtful, study and invention are making notable strides in artistic building in the United States.

styles, or for any other, for that matter; each is contributing something to the mysterious alembic we are brewing; and all we hope is that out of it may come the philosopher's stone that, touching inert matter, shall turn into refined gold—which by the way is the proper function of architecture and of all the arts.

Chaos then confronts us, in that there is no single architectural following, but legion; and in that fact lies the honor of our art, for neither is society one, or ever at one with itself. This is one of those great 500-year periods of boiling activity, one of those nodes that periodically divide the vast vibrations of our history, when all things are in flux, when all that has been for four centuries is plunging downward in disintegration, while all that shall be for another equal period is surging upward towards its culmination.

Molding Elements

I believe all the wonderful new forces now working hiddenly, or revealing themselves sporadically, will assemble to a new synthesis that will have issue in a great epoch of civilization as unified as ours is disunited, as centripetal as ours is centrifugal, as spiritually efficient as ours is materially efficient; and that then will come, and come naturally and inseparably, the inevitable art that will be glorious and great, because it shows forth a national character, a national life that also is great and glorious.

Reduced to its simplest terms, American architecture is seen to have had two epochs. First, the attempted conservation of a definite style (which whatever its genesis, had become an essential part of our racial character), and its complete disappearance exactly at the time when the serious and conservative nature of the people of the United States gave place, with an almost equal suddenness, to a new quality born partly of political independence, partly of new and stimulating natural conditions, partly of the back-wash from continental revolution, and above all of the swift working out, at last, of powers latent in the Renaissance-reformation itself. Second, the confused activities of many men of many minds who had cut loose from tradition become moribund. Communal interests, the sense of solidarity, inherited from the middle ages and persisting in strange new forms even through the renaissance epoch itself, had yielded to a crescent individualism, and architecture, like a good art, followed close at heel.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

SAN FRANCISCO CALL.—That the Pacific coast is to be the location for a new great drydock for naval purposes is understood to be a definite part of the plan of the navy department.

Where the new drydock shall be built is, of course, as yet an unsettled question. The influences interested in a northern site have for some months been very actively at work pulling hard for that section. The natural and most suitable location for the new drydock is on the shores of San Francisco bay. It is not necessary to argue that point here. It is obvious. The precise location can not be named, but it is not unlikely to be somewhere along the Point Richmond shore or in that direction; but the precise location is not of so material importance to the whole public as that it shall be somewhere on the bay. The building of a new drydock need not, will not, and should not interfere, nor be allowed to interfere, with the maintenance of the Mare Island navy yard in the most thorough manner. As Secretary Daniels is certain to come here this summer to inspect the navy yards of the coast, San Francisco should be fully prepared to answer any questions the secretary may ask and also to supply him with suitable information and data on the subject that may be available for official use. In this work every citizen of San Francisco is interested.

WASHINGTON HERALD.—The silk schedule of the Payne-Aldrich law is so complicated and involved that importers, to say nothing of the average layman, find it almost impossible to tell what the duties are on the various items. It was written by the manufacturers, and it is probable that even they did not realize the effect of the bill. The complications arise largely from the attempt to apply specific rates to silk fabrics. In the paragraph for spun silk, however, the value basis is retained and the defects of both specific and ad valorem rates are the result. The Underwood bill proposes to make all the rates in the schedule ad valorem, and, however objectionable this may be from the producers' standpoint, it tends to make the schedule intelligible. The raw material of the silk industry is on the free list. The silk worm can be cultivated in the United States, but in view of the fact that a large amount of hard labor is required, it has not proved practicable to compete with oriental countries in the production of raw silk. It is imported chiefly in skeins, reeled from the cocoon; in 1912 we imported 21,600,516 pounds, valued at $67,173,080. . . . The silk tariff is now arranged so that goods which compete directly with the classes of goods made in American mills are practically prohibited. The output of the American industry has increased rapidly, whereas the value of imports has remained stationary for 15 years. While the Underwood bill is only 5 or 10 per cent reduction on the ad valorem equivalents of the specific rates in the present law, the change from specific to ad valorem rates will admit many goods now excluded from the country and is a much more substantial reduction than appears from comparative figures. Producers are protesting strenuously against the ad valorem basis.

PHILADELPHIA TIMES.—The supreme court last week decided in a Michigan case that ownership of riparian rights along a river gave the owner no grip on the water power of the stream. It held further that the water power in navigable streams is the concern of the national government, not the state. This is a decision that has long been needed to clear up a profound uncertainty regarding control of water powers. It has been desirable that this control should be lodged definitely in nation or state, not left in the obscurity of the twilight zone. It were better handed to the nation, and that is what this decision does with it. If the decision appears, on detailed study, to reach as far as now appears, it answers conclusively the state rights argument for state control. It opens the way to the only right policy in handling the great water power resources of the country. The national government must see that hereafter no more of it is given away under conditions, or lack of conditions, which will serve the purposes of monopolization.

LOUISVILLE GETS THE EDUCATORS

LOUISVILLE.—Next year's convention of the Conference for Education in the South will be held in Louisville, April 6-10. The estimated attendance will run over 5000. Particular stress will be laid upon the problems of producing and marketing garden products whose solution in the states of Wisconsin and Minnesota have been worth many millions of dollars annually to those states, and leaders in the movements in Wisconsin will keep school in Louisville and illustrate the systems of marketing in vogue.

EAST KENTUCKY HOLDINGS SOLD

WINCHESTER, Ky.—By provisions of the deal just closed in New York, C. M. John and Floyd Day, of this city, transfer to New York parties all their holdings in eastern Kentucky involving over $1,000,000.

The transaction includes the Mountain Central railroad, 13 miles, a narrow gauge line running from Campton Junction to Campton as well as stores, mills, coal and lumber lands on the new extension of the Lexington & Eastern railway.

KOSMOS LINE ORDERS 6 BOATS

SEATTLE, Wash.—To care for the growing business of the west coast, six big new steamships have been ordered by the Kosmos line. The vessels will be built along the lines of the steamship Hathor, of that line. The building of six big vessels, each of which will have a capacity of more than 12,000 tons, is in line with the policy of the company to do away with the smaller intermediate steamships and build either distinctly freight or passenger steamships.

LIBRARY PLANS ARE MADE

SEATTLE, Wash.—Plans for the Henry L. Yester memorial branch library will soon be ready for bids. The library will cover an entire half block on Yester way, and will cost $40,000. Work will begin early in the summer, and under the terms of the agreement with the Yester estate trustees, the building must be ready for opening April 1.

VISITORIAL POWER OVER BANKS PLAN OF THE HENRY BILL

WASHINGTON.—Asserting that further investigation of the "money trust" should be immediately pressed by this Congress and that the Pujo committee of the last Congress "barely scratched the surface of the facts underlying concentration of control of money and credit," Representative Henry, chairman of the House rules committee Friday introduced a measure giving Congress visitorial power over national banking institutions and seeking to reform the present currency system.

The bill would amend section 5251 of the revised statutes as follows:

No banking association shall be subject to any visitorial powers other than are authorized by this time or are vested in the courts of justice or such as shall have been exercised or directed by the Congress or by either House thereof.

The proposition is believed to have the endorsement of William J. Bryan.

FT. WORTH POSTAL RECEIPTS GROW

FT. WORTH, Tex.—The business of the Ft. Worth postoffice is increasing each year, and business done in the 12 months preceding May 31, 1913, shows $3982 over that of the year before.

The total receipts of the Ft. Worth postoffice for the 12 months, exclusive of the money order business, was $34,638.90, while that of the previous 12 months was $30,056.24.

In the money order department a similar increase in business was shown for the single month of May.

VANISHED LAKE OF CONGO IN LORE

Ngombe Tradition Fits With Dr. Bentley's Theory That Outburst of Waters Made Mysterious Great Sahara and Libyan Deserts

(Special to the Monitor)
LONDON—In his work, "Pioneering on the Congo," Dr. Bentley refers to the vast area of a million and a half square miles in central Africa which is drained by the river Congo. He recalls that travelers in the Sahara and Libyan deserts have remarked that in those arid and rainless wastes there are gorges, river and torrent beds full of water-worn pebbles, and even fossilized remains of forests.

The rock drawings found by Richardson in Fezzan show that oxen were once used as a means of transport across the Sahara; so there must have been water and pasture for them at that time. Thus, in a more or less remote past, conditions very different from those prevailing at the present time must have existed in those regions. Dr. Bentley concludes: "The solution of the mystery lies in the Congo basin."

Breakwater Found

After compassing the pool, the intrepid explorer found that his way to the Atlantic was disturbed by a series of obstacles and rapids, much more formidable than those of Stanley falls. For he had now come to the Makaka m. Mpumbu, the natural breakwater which in past ages had dammed back the waters and so constituted the prehistoric lake. Dr. Bentley describes how this once gigantic inland sea of from 500 to 1000 feet in depth, gradually increased in volume till it overflowed its banks, and, sped by some strong east wind, it would cut a way through the sand, dislodge the rocks and boulders, till with ever-increasing momentum it finally forced its way and the goal of the mighty Atlantic was reached, where henceforth the long-imprisoned sea, to its own undoing, shall never cease to pay its tribute.

Thus the prehistoric lake became self-extinguished and the "dry land" appeared on the upper Congo, and consequently, too, the source of the excessive rainfall which formerly converted the Sahara and Libya from arid, barren desert into verdant slopes and flowing streams, was deflected.

No date has as yet been given as to when this overflow took place, but as the author quoted says, "it probably happened in times which according to geological standards, are comparatively recent."

Dr. Bentley further adds, "There is no tradition of the bursting out of the waters." The present writer, however, during the latter part of a many years' sojourn among the Ngombe tribe of the upper Congo induced an intelligent native to recount in writing some of the folk-lore of his tribe. Among the many interesting things thus recorded was the following story which seems to have some relation to an old tradition of the "bursting out of the waters," such as might be allowed to have some weight as corroborative evidence to geological conclusions. Like most of the Congo folk-lore stories this one of how Mbali climbed the palm tree and opened up the river is clothed in a domestic setting.

Tale of Mbali

It runs as follows:
A certain man had an only daughter. When she was of a marriageable age the father made a vow concerning her, namely, that he would not allow her to be married unless the would-be suitor for her hand first proved his worth by performing a certain feat. Now, there was an exceedingly high palm tree, tall and straight, growing immediately in front of his house. The palm nuts when ripe used to fall down near to where he sat. One day as he looked up at the gold nuts flashing in the sunshine an intense longing to have them all took possession of him and he exclaimed, "The youth who would marry my daughter must first climb that tree and cut me down those nuts." And he vowed a vow to keep to that decision.

The vow was published far and wide. To some of the youths it brought dismay because the tree was so very tall, but to others, the braver ones, the challenge came to stir up their ambition, and thus from all quarters eager youths came to attempt the winning of the prize and the fame which would also follow with it.

There were some who tried to obtain some modifications of the father's plan when they saw how very difficult the palm tree was to climb, but in vain, the father would repeat, "I have vowed and will keep my vow, my daughter shall never be married except to the suitor who has climbed this palm tree and cut down the nuts for me."

So one brave after another attempted the task. They started early in the morning, climbing steadily upwards till noon or later, when their arms lost their grip and they fell to the ground and were killed. One after another they came, climbed and fell, till it seemed impossible that the coveted bride would ever be won.

Palm's Conqueror Comes

However, at last there came a youth named Mbali from some distant inland tribe to the town. Mbali had been accustomed to climbing palm trees to obtain the palm wine or to cut down the nuts, so when he heard the story of the vow and the unfortunate youths who had failed in their attempts to win the girl, Mbali determined to see the father and ask permission to try. The father, noticing that Mbali was a stranger, and not in the least afraid of losing his daughter, gave his consent.

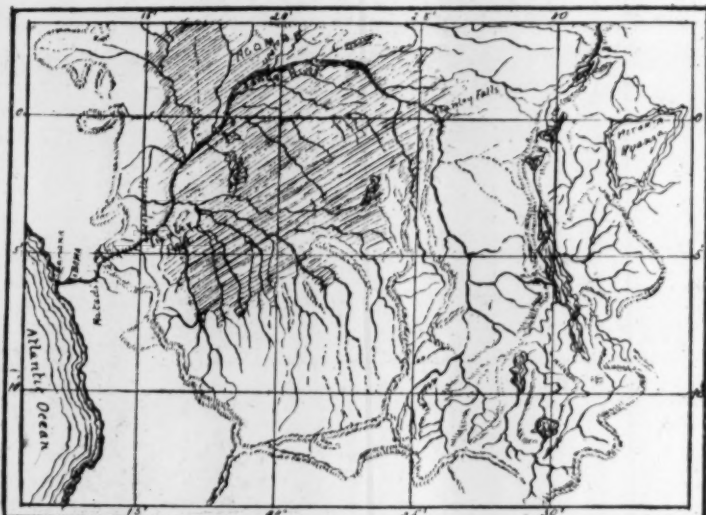

So Mbali went away into the forest

then you may have my daughter to be your wife."

It was hard on Mbali; however, he did not demur very much, and apparently confident of success he set off in search of a deep pool. He found several deep ones and tested them, but when he spoke to the father about those he thought were deep enough, the man was not satisfied and said, "No, those will not do."

So Mbali, intent on gaining the prize, went forth into the forest searching for the desired pool. He wandered about, far from the village, on and on, till at last he came to what they, the Ngombes, call the river, but which was then, at that time, a lake standing in one place, because, says the tradition, in the be-and found a good strong rattan cane and made himself a hoop or girdle such as are now commonly used by those who climb palm trees. He tied several bells to the girdle and then put it round the palm tree, taking care to fix the ends of the cane securely. Then putting himself between the girdle and the palm tree so as to support his waist, his feet being free to take step after step while he moved the girdle notch by notch, Mbali began his climb as he sang this song to cheer himself:

"Naba'sa, na'ge 'na, kata ngbe, min-gombe milanga, kat ngbe," i. e. I climb. I'll get there, hold tight, a very tall tree, hold tight. And the bells on the girdle jingled, bo, bo, bo.

Thus merrily and bravely Mbali climbed from early morning till evening (for the palm tree was so tall) and rested on his girdle through the night. On the following day, resuming his climbing, he succeeded in reaching the top, and taking out his knife, he cut out two bunches of the golden nuts.

Prize Denied Him
He now began his descent, which was, of course, more rapidly accomplished than the ascent. On reaching the ground again he saw a great crowd from the district around had gathered and he heard them singing his praises. For where many had failed Mbali had now succeeded. This made him very happy, and, greatly elated, Mbali went to the father to claim the prize, the daughter in marriage.

But somehow the father was reluctant to keep his promise (it may be that he objected to his daughter becoming the wife of a man from another and distant tribe), at any rate he said to Mbali, "No! you cannot have her, my daughter, unless you will do another thing for me; you must find me a very deep pool, a pool as deep as the palm tree was high."

THE BUSYVILLE BEES

RHYMES BY
M. L. BAUM

Dutchman's breeches, neat and fine,
Hanging on a slanting line!
Busy thinks perhaps a pair
Might be rather neat to wear.

Here a nip and there a tuck in,
Bits of grass for pins are stuck in!
They are made without a button,
Busy thinks them hard to put on.

Sue, who wears her oldest dimity,
Stands amazed at his sublimity;
Thinks she too will go a-shopping,
Off she runs, a-hipp'y-hopping.

To the Canterbury bells
Her requirements she tells;
Cup and saucer kind—they're double—
Make a kind of flouncy hobble.

Pink and full, yet shirred the while Round the ankles, just in style;
When the two display their glory,
Then it's just the same old story.

All the rest play copy cat—
You can always count on that;
From the flow'rs the gay carousers,
Borrow kirtles, caps and trousers.

Though full skirts are out of fashion,
Lida really looks quite dashin',
In a double cabbage rose—Trailing 'round her tiny toes.

Susie after much exertion,
Plucks a leaf of the nasturtium,
Wears it as a parasol,
Thinks she still outdoes them all.

Baff, of course, has torn his clo'es,
See the blue patch May Bee sews;
Thinking it a pretty ornament,
Baff is proud of his adornment.

Hop a morning glory wears,
Likes it just because it flares;
He's so lively that one knows
He could never bear tight clo'es.

Mistrandmissiz Lady Bird Whispering are overheard,
"Not for new clothes, lots and lots,
Would we hide our polka dots."

Now along the path they're flocking,
All parading and peacocking, Different from the birds, one sees
That fine feathers make fine bees.

YELLOW-HAMMER IS SAID TO HAVE THIRTY-SIX NAMES

THERE is no more interesting study than that of our native birds. Any one who knows the birds and flowers that he sees will enjoy a ramble over the fields infinitely more than a person who just sees them and thinks no more about them, says a writer for Harper's Young People.

A beginner will find plenty of birds that he doesn't know the names of. It is a good thing to take a small note book along with you in your walks, and when you see a bird you don't know note down all about it you can—its size, color, markings, song, food, flight, eggs, nest, and locality, and anything else which will help you to identify it.

Then the first chance you get go to some collection of stuffed birds, if you know of any, or, if not, to a library where you can look over some good books on birds, and you will generally find what bird it is. Most libraries contain some good books on the subject. The standard ones are Audubon's "Birds of America," and works by Alexander Wilson, Robert Ridgway, Nuttall, etc.

The yellow hammer, as it is commonly called, has, it is said, 36 names. He is a very handsome bird, especially when examined closely. He is a woodpecker, and builds in a hole in a tree, but gathers most of his food from the ground; he is fond of ants and their eggs. The color on the back is dark, with a large white spot at the base of the tail which is very conspicuous in flight. The breast is beautifully spotted, and a black collar separates it from the throat. The wings underneath are yellow or golden, from which he derives several of his names, such as yellow-shafted woodpecker and golden-winged woodpecker. On the back of the head is the prettiest bright red crescent imaginable. The bird has an undulating flight. Sometimes it nests very low. The eggs, generally six in number, are laid on the chips at the bottom of the nest. They are white, and larger than a robin's. These birds make interesting pets, and are beautiful for their plumage, if not for song.

Another interesting bird is the chimney swallow or chimney swift. It is of a uniform dark color. It has scarcely any beak, but has a very broad mouth, and very bright, piercing eyes. It has scarcely any feathers on its tail, though its wings are very long. Like the robin and bluebird, this bird builds very near us—in our chimneys—but we scarcely ever see him at home. We can't, in fact, unless we climb up on the roof and look down the chimney. If we did, we should see a very small nest made of twigs glued together which looks too small to hold a bird. Perhaps there are four white slightly long eggs in it. The twigs of which the nest is built are gathered by the birds while on the wing, and they hardly ever alight outside of a chimney.

SUMMER FLOWER NOTES TAKEN FOR WINTER WORK

A GIRL whose occupation is design can never have too many notes or ideas for new work, says the Youths Companion. A well-known decorator and teacher of design makes, every summer, a flower notebook, which she uses the next winter. She takes a water-color sketch book of medium size, and fills it with careful wash drawings of all the flowers she can find. She gives to each flower one whole leaf of the book. After making a characteristic line-drawing with a hard pencil, she lays the colors on flat; that is, with no reference to light or shade, but with great care to reproduce the color exactly. The result is an attractive, decorative portrait of the flower that can be used in many ways.

The success of such a book depends, of course, on the ability to see the decorative possibilities in plants and flowers, and to portray the flower in a conventional, rather than in a realistic manner. For example, in the case of drawing and painting a wild rose, you would obtain a useless result if you placed the rose in a vase, where the cross-lights shone through the leaves and petals, and cast shadows here and there. A study of a rose seen under those conditions does not lend itself to a decorative scheme, but a conventionalized study of a wild rose can be used to advantage in many designs.

In making decorative studies from flowers, place them against a plain background, and try to see them as flat as possible, without regard to the values of leaves and petals. Determine what quality of pink the petals are, paint them in simple and flat, and do the same with the leaves. After the first wash has dried, put in the markings of the veins with accents of stronger color, and indicate what can be seen of the stamens and pistils. In some cases, where the design and continuity of the lines is the feature that can be most effectively worked into the decoration, it is useful to intensify the outline either with ink or with a pencil.

Butterflies, beetles, and such sea-creatures as starfish and horseshoe crabs will add useful studies to the flower book. The careful study of a sand-dollar is well worth your time. The design on that dainty, frail thing is extremely simple, but very lovely. Seaweed, too, is a source of much fine material, for many varieties have a delicacy of line and color that lends itself charmingly to design.

JUNE DAYS

June days too pleasant are, by far,
To study out of books;
These days were made to study flowers,
And stones and trees and brooks.

CORRECT ENGLISH

"Are these two sentences right, and why? (1) 'Neither men nor angels are perfect.' (2) 'It was thought to be he.' (The point in dispute is the use of the pronoun 'he'.)"

(1) The plural form must be used because the subject is plural: men, angels. Singular subjects connected by or or nor would call for a singular verb: "Neither man nor angel was." (2) In the sentence "It was thought to be he," the phrase was thought to be is virtually a single expression; the sentence consists of a subject, it, a verbal compound, was thought to be, and a predicate-nominative, he.—Literary Digest.

MONITOR BOOK OF GAMES

SCHOOL RELAY FLAG RACE

A LONG chalk line is drawn across the schoolroom in front of the desks. The children are seated in files, which have each the same number of players, and a state flag is given to the first child in each file. The child takes the flag to the back of the room and stands opposite his aisle, with his foot touching the wall. At the signal "Start" he runs down the aisle to the chalk line, makes an about-face, and runs back to his starting-point. There he is met by the second child in his file, who takes the flag as quickly as possible, and runs with it as the first runner did. This continues until every child in the file has run. The file which finishes first receives the United States flag, and keeps it until some other file wins it away.

The race may be varied by having the children jump between desks of adjacent rows, by having them hop down the aisle on the right foot and hop back on the left, or by having them stop between desks or chairs to perform definite tasks, such as picking up and replacing beans or stones, or performing some gymnastic exercise.—School Education.

WHO'S WHO?

A game interesting and instructive to grown-ups as well as children is played in this way—names of well-known people are written on slips of paper and pinned to the backs of those assembled for the game. Then by wise and persistent questioning, each individual is to find out the name of the person he represents, the questions being put in such a way that they can be answered only by saying "yes" or "no." To give a hint as to some leading questions—find out the nationality and occupation. The game may be varied by selecting fictitious characters, and it is a good plan to find out at the start whether one is real or fictitious; if the latter, to find out the author who wrote about him is of first importance.

The Monitor prints one or two games each week. Cut out and paste in blank book, and you will have a good collection.

BAT-BALL NEW GAME FOR GIRLS

THE game of German bat-ball is both new and interesting, says the Youths Companion. The only apparatus necessary is a volley-ball, or if that is not obtainable, a basket-ball. The game requires an oblong field about 50 by 80 feet, across which, 10 feet from the front boundary, a line is drawn. A post or stake is driven into the ground on the line of the center of the field, 60 or 70 feet from the front boundary.

The players form two equal teams, at least nine on each side. One team takes its place in the field beyond the 10-foot line, with its members well separated, to cover as much ground as possible. The members of the other team bat, in turn, from the front boundary line.

The first batter throws the ball a little way into the air, and with the palm of her hand bats it into the field. Her aim is to drive it over the 10-foot line. If she fails, she is "out," and the second batter from her team takes her place. If she succeeds, she immediately starts to run into the field, passing to the right, round the post, and back over the line at the front of the field. Meanwhile, the players in the field secure the batted ball, pass it from one to another, and try to hit the runner with it. A runner hit by the ball thrown by any of the fielders is "out," but a runner who reaches her goal without being touched by the ball is credited with one point for her team.

When all the members of one side have been at bat, the teams change places. Any number of innings may be played. The game is so simple that it requires no coaching, but team plays and quick methods of passing the ball can be worked out by the players.

Special points to be observed by batters are these:

COLLEGE MEN MANIFEST INTEREST IN BOY SCOUTS

THE students of Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., have done splendid work in promoting scoutcraft under the auspices of the Boy Scouts of America. For more than two years they have been busily at work and have organized troops of scouts, not only in Williamstown but also in North Adams. They have more than 150 boys in training, 96 of whom are scouts and 50 of whom are trying for their tenderfoot examination; of the 22 students who have charge of the boys, eight have received commissions from the national headquarters of the Boy Scouts of America. Among the seniors of Williams College who are actively interested in the scout work are: I. F. Smith, W. Rice, W. Clarkson, J. A. Bower and B. M. Eyre.

Summer school of the University of Virginia offers under its courses on rural school problems and recreation and playgrounds, a careful study of the boy scout movement. It is planned to show in the course the means of reaching and holding boys through their activities and interests and the boy scouts is taken as the typical character building form of recreation. Prof. Myron T. Souder, A. M., an eminent graduate of Rutgers College, author and school principal, gives this course at the Virginia university. Other colleges and summer schools are also considering the importance of the boy scout movement in all recreational problems.

Mrs. Frank Boyer of Marion, Ind., whose son is a boy scout, is enthusiastic over what the scouts accomplish. She writes: "As one of the many mothers of boy scouts in this country I want to say a few words in praise of the scout movement and the vast amount of good it is doing and will surely continue to do for our boys. If each scout will strictly obey the laws and teachings of the organization, they cannot fail to become perfect gentlemen and good citizens. I have taken pains to inform myself about the order because my own son is a scout, patrol leader of first Marion troop. He is very enthusiastic about the work and has composed a song, embracing the words of the 12 scout laws, as a means to help the boys remember their obligations."

Special boy scout delivery is the newest form of volunteer service. It was originated by W. W. Brundage, scout executive of Buffalo, N. Y. Two volunteer boy scouts are detailed at headquarters every day after school. These boys are used for various scout duties and when they deliver any envelopes or packages, these are marked with a rubber stamp, "Special Boy Scout Delivery."

WHY

WHY have we to develop photographs in a red light? We know that white light is really a mixture of light of all sorts of colors—red, yellow, green, blue, and so on. Some of these lights of various colors have one kind of power and some another. Now the kind of light that has the power of causing chemical changes, which is the light we photograph by, is mainly violet light. We can see in a way by red light, but red light has practically no influence on photographic plates. We may say that photographic plates cannot see red light, and so we can use red light to develop them by without any likelihood that the photograph of our faces or the walls of the room will be printed on the plates.—Tacoma Tribune.

HOLD THE BALL LOW IF YOU WOULD STOP A SLIDE

A SHARP single has been hit and the baserunner at second dashes to third and starts for home. The left fielder, however, already has the ball and it is plain that his perfect throw will beat the runner to the plate. The catcher as the ball "plunks" into his mitt makes a lunge forward to meet the runner, who slides in a peculiar way that brings one cleated foot toward the outside corner of the plate at an angle. The catcher misses, makes a second attempt and hears the umpire call, "Safe!"

This is one of the common incidents of baseball; the "fall-away" slide has scored against a catcher who does not know how to meet the attack. He has made a mistake that many young players fall into; he was overeager to put an opponent out and tried to tag him high—on the body or shoulders.

Because there is no need for caution against oversliding, the slide to the home plate is hard and low. Therefore in tagging a man the catcher contends with greater difficulties than the basemen do. A little effort in the right direction, however, will enable him to build up a defense that will prevent many a run and add much to his team's chances of winning games.

The first thing to learn is that in putting the ball on a runner who is sliding it is generally unwise to step forward to meet him. Of course in case of a poor throw the catcher will be drawn out of position, but when the play is close and the throw is good the catcher should stay at the plate and not "go after" the runner; and it is no less important that he should hold the ball low, so that the runner cannot get under him.

Acting on this idea, the coach of a successful college team instructs his catchers to hold the ball in such a position that the runner will have to touch it before he can touch the plate. For example, the catcher receives a throw from the field, and barely has time to cover the plate before the runner slides. Instantly he perceives that the other man is going to try to slip safely across the outside corner.

Instead of lunging forward, uncovering the base, and giving the runner the very chance he is hoping for, the catcher drops into a position in which the ball is held on the ground a few inches outside the corner to be defended. The very satisfactory result is that the runner does not find an opening, and his feet brush the ball before touching the plate. Also, as experience has shown, this method decreases the possibility of the catcher's being "spiked," says the Youth's Companion.

The second and third basemen also ought to keep in mind, when meeting a slider, that the ball should be held low and close to the base, where it is ready to touch the foot or hand that darts forward feeling for the bag. Then there will be fewer opponents tagged on the shoulders half a second after their feet have found the goal.

CAMERA CONTEST

Two little New Hampshire farmers engaged in cultivating a field of potatoes

THE two little farmers pictured in today's illustration live in East Titton, N. H. They are at work in a potato patch. James H. Woodward, who sends the photograph, says they expect a large crop. The little girl looks spic and span in her white dress and bonnet, the latter hiding her face so one cannot see it. The boy's straw hat has evidently seen service, and there is a loophole through which the sun may shine upon his neck, but little cares he and he works on merrily.

One-dollar award: James H. Woodward, Titton, N. H. Honorable mention: Horace Yeomans, Long Beach, Cal.

BEAUTY OF THE FISHES AND THEIR WINTER WAYS

WHO has watched the fishes in a brook or an aquarium and is not able to grant them a place, in beauty, grace and delicate coloration, equal to the birds? As winter approaches and the leaves fall the birds leave us and go farther south into warmer climates, where food is more abundant. We are all familiar with this habit of the birds, says the Progressive Teacher, but how many of us know or have even wondered what the fishes do through the winter months? Before the warmth of spring comes to raise the temperature of the streams, let us go to some familiar place in a brook where, during the summer, are to be found scores of minnows. None is to be found now. Suppose we go farther up or down the stream until we find a protected pool the bottom of which is covered with sediment and water-soaked leaves. With our net we will dip up some of the leaves and sediment, being sure that we dip from the very bottom. On looking over this mass of muddy material we may find a fish two or three inches long, with very fine scales, a black back, a silvery belly and a blackish or brown band on the side of the body extending from the tip of the nose to the tail. This is the black-nosed dace. If specimens of this fish are caught very early in the spring one will be able to watch some interesting color changes. As the spawning time approaches, the dark band on the sides and the fins change to a bright crimson. Sometimes the whole body may be of this gaudy color. During the summer the lateral band becomes orange. As the season goes, the bright colors gradually fade until finally, in the fall and winter, the little black-nose is again clothed in his more modest attire. A great many of the fishes, and especially the larger ones, seek some deep pond or pool in the stream at the approach of winter, and remain near the bottom. When the stream is very shallow and the fishes feel the cold, they settle down to the bottom, moving about very little and taking little or no food. The carp collect in small numbers and pass the winter in excavations that they make in the muddy bottom. If the debris thrown up by the water across the marshy end of a lake be raked during the winter, one will probably find some of the smaller catfishes spending the season in a semi-dormant state.

Some evening just at sunset visit a quiet pool in a nearby stream and you may see a beautiful creature with a thin, flat body shaped something like the seed of a pumpkin. His back is an olive green delicately shaded with blue. His sides are spotted with orange, while his belly is a bright yellow. His cheeks are orange color streaked with wavy lines of blue. Just behind his eyes is a bright scarlet spot. This is the common sunfish or pumpkin seed.

THE JUNIOR PHILATELIST

BI-WEEKLY DEPARTMENT COVERING STAMP-COLLECTING INTERESTS

NEW YORK EXHIBITION

COLLECTORS of postage stamps in all parts of the world are interested in the International Philatelic exhibition which will take place in New York next October. It will bring to the Engineering Society's building, in West Thirty-ninth street, where the exhibition will be held, the most valuable collection of stamps, stamp envelopes and objects pertaining to the subject ever assembled in this country, and it will have the support of well-known philatelists from all parts of the world, according to the New York Sun.

Among the notable collections which will be on view will be those of George H. Worthington and Ernest R. Ackerman, honorary president and vice-president, respectively, of the exhibition. The Worthington collection is the largest in the United States and is valued at $750,000. The collection of Australian and Cape of Good Hope stamps, owned by Charles Lathrop Peck and valued at $30,000, will also be among the first class attractions. A collection of 55 stamps and variations from Papua, Oceania, will probably be as interesting to some of the visitors as many of the numerically greater exhibits, because the specimens belong in the "rare" class, as these stamps are said to be worth about $10,000. Prizes in the form of gold, silver and bronze medals and diplomas will be awarded for superior collections.

"It is difficult to estimate the number of stamp collectors in the country," said J. W. Scott, "but there are certainly not less than 250,000 who have been graduated from the class of experimenters to that of real collectors."

The regular issues are the chief collection material, but oddities, freaks and out of the ordinary specimens are eagerly acquired by the enthusiastic stamp hunter, and some of these are among the most highly prized features of the collections. Thus there is in the Peck exhibit a four-penny blue stamp which was once a part of the Sir William Avery collection. The swan, which forms the chief decoration, is inverted, making this proof of the engraver's error a factor in the stamp's value, which is now held at $3,000.

That mistakes are made in this country also in the process of producing stamps became evident when the two-cent Pan-American stamps were issued in 1901. One sheet of 100 show the railway train inverted. The sheet went to the Brooklyn postoffice, where no one seemed to think enough of the blunder to make any comment on the subject, but when all but one block of four stamps had been disposed of, an employee bought them at the face value, investing eight cents just to have the pleasure of owning the queer bits of paper. A short time ago $1700 was refused for the four stamps.

One of the stamps with a history which will be seen at the exhibition is known to philatelists as the "widow's mite" and is a part of the Henry J. Duven collection, which is probably one of the most valuable in the world. The "widow's mite" derives its name from the fact that the stamp was given to a church fair by a woman in Georgetown, British Guiana, who knew it was valuable. Despite the fact that it is a crude specimen, faded and of no artistic value, it netted the church $1100, which was not its full value, for the present owner has placed a price of $7500 on it. In the Duven collection there is also a pair of Mauritius stamps, one penny and two pennies in denomination, which the owner values at $8000 each. There are 19 similar specimens of these stamps in various parts of the world.

A collection of stamped United States envelopes owned by George H. Worthington, consisting of over 10,000 specimens and valued at about $75,000, will be on exhibition and will then become the property of the Museum of Fine Arts at Cleveland, to which the owner will present it.

The committee is now at work on a second edition of the prospectus and scheme of competition. This will show a number of changes from the first edition that was issued the latter part of the winter. A new class has been added to the list of competitions which will appear in the revised prospectus. This new class provides for original research work.

Collectors will be greatly interested in knowing that some of the most prominent foreign philatelists, who are authorities on stamps, will consent to act as judges. It is certain that some of the most distinguished philatelists of Europe and of Canada will be seen in New York in October.

PORTRAITS OF PRESIDENT TAYLOR Writing on specialized United States stamps, in Mekeel's Weekly, Frank E. Goodwin says: The treaty of Berne, in 1875, by whose terms the rate of international postage was made five cents, created a requirement for a stamp of the denomination of five cents. Designs were hurriedly submitted, as hastily approved, and the order to make a die and plates for the new stamp was given to the Continental Bank Note Company. The stamp was issued on or about June 21, 1875. This design, a full faced portrait of Zachary Taylor, is far from being an artistic piece of work, but it is a bit handsomer than the 2 cent stamp of 1862, with Jackson's face portrayed.

While this stamp has never been considered very prolific in varieties, yet there are sufficient differences to make it an interesting stamp for the average specialist. To the very studios it possesses quite a wide field, in that there are various engravers' marks which indicate operations of the stamp makers, not apparent upon the face of the stamps to the casual examiner.

Two plates were made at first, being numbered 243 and 244. The demand for this denomination made it necessary to increase the printing output, and plates 247 and 248 were soon after it. Later plate number 284 was constructed, and the last plate made by the Continental Bank Note Company was number 306.

Mr. Luff gives as shades: blue, dark blue, greenish blue and deep greenish blue. I have seen several copies in a shade darker than dark blue, which might be called a blackish blue.

This stamp is catalogued by Scott as having been griddled with the Continental grille, for legal purposes. I have seen a copy which was embossed, and appeared to be regular, but should hesitate to include it as griddled without further evidence. Paper varieties are: vertical ribbed, horizontal ribbed, double paper.

When the reissues were ordered printed by the Continental Bank Note Company for the government exhibit at the centennial in Philadelphia in 1876, this stamp was included, notwithstanding that it was current. It was printed from plate number 248, and was in a shade of bright blue. In July, 1880, it was reprinted, by the American Bank Note Company, in shade of deep blue. These reissues are all on the hard white paper which is one of the distinguishing marks—the color being the other. Of these reissues, numbering 10,300, were returned and destroyed 10,183 stamps, leaving 317 to be accounted for.

Owing to an overstock of the 1 cent orange and 2 cent brown revenue stamps, the minister of the interior in Chile has authorized their use as postage stamps.

L'Echo states that the head of Liberty has been removed from the 1000r. stamp of the current Brazilian series, and the portrait of the Baron of Rio Branco substituted therefor.

WHAT THE GIRL SHOULD DO WHO PURPOSES TO TEACH

THE girl who plans to teach must realize that if she is to succeed she must have the initiative, resource and courage that will enable her to keep the attention of a class, and to avoid monotony and dull, mechanical routine. By reading the life of Arnold of Rugby, of Mary Lyon, and those of other masters in the field of secondary education, she can secure an insight into the personal qualities that win success; she can gain an understanding of the pupil by reading some of the many excellent studies of adolescence that are now appearing, and also through a careful consideration of the revelations that are contained in personal reminiscence.

Capacity to appreciate the point of view and limitations of one's pupils is quite as important as scholarship; in fact, the most successful teachers are not specialists who lay stress on the refinements of scholarship, but rather young men and women who can put themselves in the place of the learner, anticipate his difficulties and give an outlook on the broader aspects of the subject. This they cannot do unless they bring to their work a quick and ready sympathy with boys and girls of high-school age, says a Youth's Companion writer.

The prospective teacher should not make her training highly specialized. The narrowly prepared teacher is rarely successful. Moreover, few high schools that employ inexperienced teachers have enough classes in any one subject, except occasionally English, to warrant a special teacher. An excellent plan is to master two or three cognate subjects, such as English and history, or mathematics and physical science, or Latin and a modern language—German, preferably, in the West, and French in the East. After the teacher has gained the necessary experience, and with it access to one of the specialized positions, she can follow one favorite subject as far as she will.

A girl who is seeking a position as a high-school teacher can learn of vacancies through friends or acquaintances already in the public-school service, through the appointment bureau of her college, or through commercial agencies. Vacancies open to beginners are usually in high schools situated in villages or small towns.

There are manifest advantages to the novice in the conditions that obtain in the smaller schools. She does not have to begin her professional career in competition with experienced teachers. Recitation divisions are not large, and she can become intimately acquainted with her pupils. On the other hand, the teacher in the small high school has more subjects to carry and more exercises a day than is the case in the city.

In larger schools the teacher is able to follow the work in which she is especially interested. With fewer recitations each day, and preparation in a limited number of subjects, she can perfect herself in skill of presentation and in mastery of subject matter. There is, however, danger in the routine and the tendency to follow mechanical methods. The organization and management of a large high school require attention to details and elaborate system, and the teacher must be on guard against becoming absorbed in petty matters to such an extent as to lose freshness and spontaneity. Again, the handling of a large class calls for skill in management and ability to control.

As usual in the field of education, the salaries are lower than in similar positions in other callings that require no greater ability or training. The beginner can reasonably expect to receive from $450 to $600 a year. A principal of a small school, at the outset, usually receives from $800 to $900. A year or two of successful experience insures an increase in salary of from $50 to $100 in the small high school, or promotion to a more important position. Positions of assistants in the larger high schools pay from $800 to $1000; heads of departments get from $1200 to $1500; and principals, from $1500 to $2000. In cities, salaries range from $2000 to $3000 for subordinate positions, and from $2500 to $4000 for principals. In some places, teachers receive pensions on retiring if they have taught a certain length of time.

GIRL'S NEEDS IN THE WAY OF CLOTHES FOR CAMP TOUR

IN all camping arrangements, economy of space and weight is necessary. Bedding, tents and food supplies necessarily take much space, therefore clothing and accessories must be light, and you should plan for them accordingly.

For the dress, a light, waterproof material is best. In some kinds of camping, khaki is good, for it is strong enough to stand the hardest use, and yet is not cumbersome. The objection to it is that it is rather stiff and uncomfortable when it is wet, and that it often is too warm, says the Youth's Companion. On the whole, a woolen material is much to be preferred. The skirt should, of course, be short and the jacket loose.

For horseback-riding a divided skirt is necessary. By using a detachable front panel, buttoned on both sides, the skirt can easily be converted into a modest walking skirt. The girl who cannot make such a skirt herself can buy one at any sporting-goods supply-house. It will cost from $5 up. Omit hip pocket, for in the woods they are always catching on brush.

A second short skirt of strong, lightweight material will take up little room in the pack, and is more comfortable than the riding skirt for wear about camp, and ordinary walking or tramping. It should be full enough to allow perfect freedom of motion, but not fuller than that.

Plain shirtwaists made of outing flannel are both strong and cool. They should have one breast pocket, at least, and two pockets are better. In camp no girl should carry a watch in her belt or pinned on her breast. A pocket is the only safe place for it. Bloomers take the place of petticoats. A coat sweater for camp use is more comfortable than a riding coat.

Footwear should be chosen with reference to the locality and the pastimes to be followed. There should be at least one pair of ordinary, stout walking shoes, with hobnails in the soles and the heels and there should be either a lighter pair to wear round camp, or a pair of moccasins.

The head covering should be as simple as possible and chosen with reference to climate and locality—a felt hat with a straight, stiff brim four inches wide, or a soft hat with becoming scarf or band, or a golf cap. A neat belt and a few neckties take up little space and they make possible slight changes in dress that are pleasing. Suitable clothes for camping are not unbecoming clothes.

Light, strong gloves for rough climbing and tramping or horseback-riding keep the hands from scratches. In cold mountain climates the gloves should be heavy and lined to keep the hands warm. Gauntlets are not advisable, for the cuffs catch and hold dirt and twigs.

A change of union suits varying in weight according to the time of year, stockings, handkerchiefs, towels, and a few necessary toilet articles packed in a strong canvas case, complete a girl's needs in the way of dress.

For night wear, flannel pajamas are convenient, and in cold mountain climates they make warm sleeping-clothes. Two accessories that occupy little space, and are useful, are a dark kimono of silk, or crepe, or any material that folds up into the smallest possible space, and a pair of light slippers. Where rains are likely to be encountered, a poncho or a long waterproof cape is necessary. The poncho, a rubber sheet with a hole in the center to admit the head, is the better.

The best way to carry this outfit is in a duffelbag, made of heavy canvas. For a horseback trip the bag is indispensable, for it can be tied behind the saddle, and for a wagon it is convenient because it can be packed into almost any place. The material should be waterproof if possible.

BEES PEACEABLE AS WELL AS VERY INDUSTRIOUS

LET us take a peep into the home of the bee, writes a London contributor to the Monitor. Suppose we go into the old straw hive, called a skep, first. But stay, there is a sentry at the door and we do not know the password. Let us make some smoke and the bees will think their home is on fire and will hurry in to carry out as much of their treasure, in honey, as possible. See! how they all scurry about. Even the sentry leaves his post and joins the others in filling themselves with honey. Now we can enter in unobserved or unheeded. See! we are in long and high galleries, and the walls are made up of cell upon cell, just big enough for a bee to get into. Look! how they are all putting their heads into these cells and drinking the honey they have stored there; and what a lot of galleries there are, nine or ten in this hive and all so beautifully uniform and straight. We certainly begin to feel a great respect for the little people who are clustering on the walls of their self-made home.

This other hive is made of wood, it certainly looks more grand and imposing, if not so picturesque as the skep we have seen. We shall have to use smoke here, too, for if we did not the sentries would alarm the other workers and they would all rush out and drive the intruder away with their small, but effective weapon, their sting.

They are a peaceable people and are never so happy and contented as when hard at work in the fields gathering honey, and it is only in defense of their young and home that they attack people. The wood hive is very like the other inside except that the galleries and walls are more even and uniform. A long while ago the bees all lived in trees and holes, but men induced them to live in nice straw houses because then they got a lot of honey to eat. Then some kind-hearted man thought of making wood hives with roofs that would take off, providing the bees with two or more rooms so that they could just take the honey out of the rooms the bees were not occupying at the time.

Before we go, we must say good-bye to the queen; we shall know her by her size, she being about half as big again as one of her subjects; she rules supreme and her subjects will not have another queen amongst them so long as the old queen lives.

ON THE SEASHORE

Merrily, merrily dance the sails
Over the summer sea;
Down to the rocks and the yellow sand,
Down to the sand go we.

Hey, for a bucket and hey for a spade,
Hey for the silver sea!
Bricks and mortar for merrymen,
Castles of sand for me.

Seaweed and shells for windows and doors,
Doors out into the sea;
Fish for sentinels, crabs for guards,
Pebbles for lock and key.

We are the kings of the golden sand,
Queens of the silver sea;
Ours is the kingdom of spades and pails,
None are so happy as we.

LEAP AND FLY

Grasshoppers are remarkable for possessing in an almost equal degree the power of flying and leaping. The body is thin, long and flattened at the sides; the legs are six in number, the hind ones being much larger than the others and longer than the body. The chirping noise made by the insect is caused by the rubbing of the thighs of the hind legs against the horny wing covers.—Progressive Teacher.

HOW TO KNOW THE FOREST TREES OF MASSACHUSETTS

From Pocket Manual issued by F. W. Rane, State Forester, Boston

BLACK ASH (Fraxinus nigra Marsh)

THE black ash is found to a certain extent throughout the state, though more abundantly in the central and western portions than in the eastern. It confines itself almost exclusively to rich, moist ground in the vicinity of streams and swamps.

In habit it is a very slender tree, usually growing to a height of 60 to 70 feet and having a diameter of one to two feet. In the woods the trunk is slim and without branches until near its very top. In the open it may have a broad, round head.

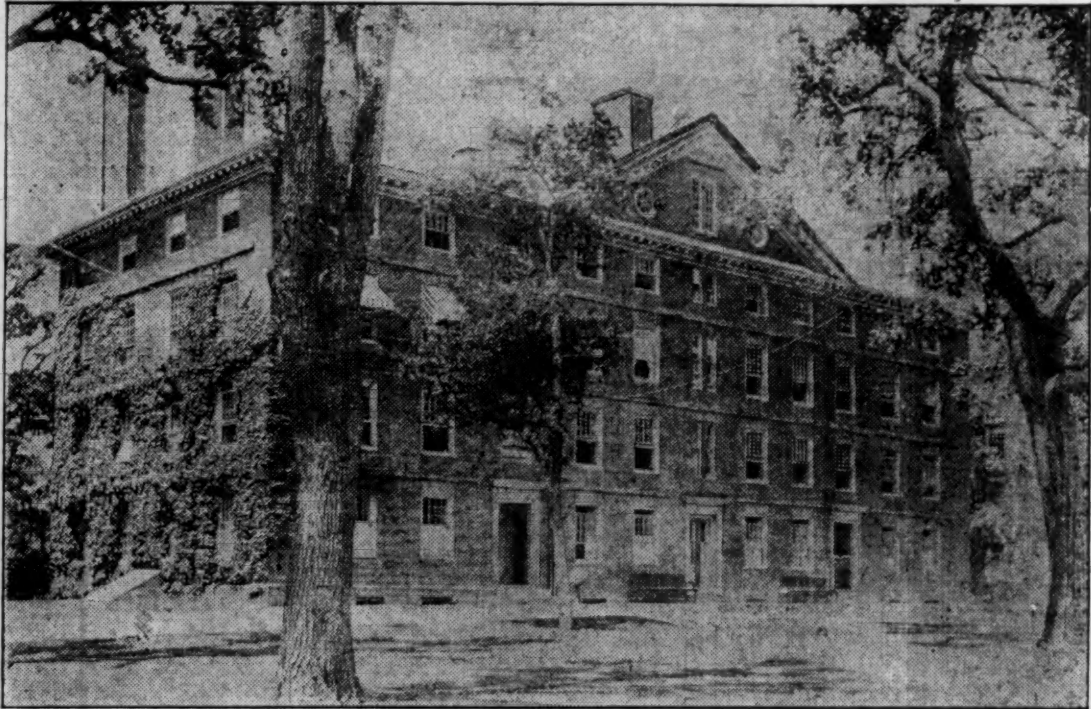

The bark on the trunk is dark gray and marked by parallel ridges. The season's shoots are olive-green and smooth, and the buds are black.

The leaves are opposite, 12 to 15 inches in length and consist of 7 to 11 leaflets. These are oblong, four to five inches long, remotely toothed and without stalks, except in the case of the terminal one.

The flowers and fruit for all superficial purposes resemble those of the white ash.

The wood is heavy, soft, tough and interior finishing, for hoops and for baskets. For this last purpose it is held in very high esteem.

JOURNALISTIC BOON LONG FORESEEN

Margaret Fuller Seventy Years Ago Said Newspaper as Organ of Thought and Instruction Would Yet Be Used Worthily

WHEN Margaret Fuller went to New York to undertake the literary and artistic reviewing of the Tribune, she essayed a rather intricate and prickly task.

She was to incur not only the criticism of those who were not ready to concede to a woman either the right or the ability to work on an intellectual level with men, the differing criticism that hovered about anybody who had been associated with the much misunderstood Brook Farm experiment, and that more personal comment always attracted by taking up daily living in changed environment of standards and ideals. Most embarrassing of all these checks of circumstance was the necessity of adjusting herself, as far as in her lay, to a change of literary method.

Newspaper exigencies met her at every turn. Readiness rather than thoroughness, timeliness rather than fruition, quantity rather than quality, delivery on the minute rather than perfection of detail, these were the points upon which emphasis rested, and it seems as if the memory of the Minute Men must have been dear to her at this crisis as would the only Concord tradition that would fit into her new need.

Quality Emphasized

Greeley being himself essentially a political writer, journalist through and through, had yet a keen eye for literary personages who should bring to his paper the prestige in things pertaining to letters that he himself could not give it. So George Ripley, Margaret Fuller, George William Curtis, Bayard Taylor and others of like caliber were gathered in to make the literary portion of the Tribune admirable. None of these gave more generously of all that was in them than did the one woman in that galaxy, nor was her star, though brief in its shining, by any means the least luminous.

Mr. Greeley believed in and admired her talents, while grumbling that he could write ten columns to her one. He paid high tribute to the work she did in making the charitable and reformatory institutions of the city known to the public, yet failed to discern that its excellence was the result of well-planned, unhurried visits made to these institutions in company with William Henry Channing, and of that interest in the reforms needed that caused her to look upon incidents and views thus acquired not merely as material for articles, but as the wherewithal to help less fortunate humanity. So, too, he cherished the highest sense of her integrity as a writer. "I learned," he wrote afterward, "to know her as a most fearless and unselfish champion of truth and human good at all hazards." Yet he wondered musingly why she was loth to snatch up a book or a topic upon which she was superficially informed and fill her one column, or the desired decade for that matter, with what would pass as a review or a discussion.

This she could do so far as writing something readable into the allotted space was concerned, and once she did it. The critique of Longfellow's poems that brought so much censure upon its writer was done in precisely this manner. She had begged to be excused, giving as her reason that she was not sufficiently in sympathy with Longfellow's method to do his work justice. But the review had to be written then and there or some other paper might be first and no one else competent had time. So she reluctantly and hastily wrote what she had been feeling in an unformed way, without first giving the poems as collected that reasonable amount of study that undoubtedly would have issued, in one so fair-minded, in an utterance at once more just and less provincial.

Nothing, however, proves her depth of purpose more clearly than the large measure in which this woman, known to all her friends as one inclined to dogmatism and a full appreciation of her own intellectual value, learned to use her instrument as her conductor required, so that had she done nothing else her work in the newspaper field would have constituted in itself a valid claim to remembrance.

Opportunity for Service

And this, again, was plainly the outcome of her conviction that the newspaper as an institution had a beneficent calling. Certain words of hers about the dignity of newspaper writing were the result of cogitations that would not have been entertained by a less earnest, more personally ambitious worker.

She wrote: "The means which that organ affords of diffusing knowledge and sowing the seeds of thought where they may hardly fail of an infinite harvest, cannot be too highly prized by the discerning and benevolent. Minds of the first class are generally indisposed to this kind of writing; what must be done on the spur of the occasion and cast into the world so incomplete as the hurried offspring of a day's or an hour's labor must generally be, cannot satisfy their judgment, or do justice to their powers. But he who looks to the benefit of others, and sees with what rapidity and ease instruction and thought are assimilated by men when they come thus, as it were, on the wings of the wind, may be content."

"The confidence in uprightness of intent and the safety of truth is still more needed here than in the more elaborate forms of writing. Newspaper writing is next door to conversation. . . . It has this advantage that we address, not our neighbor who forces us to remember his limitations and prejudices, but the ideal presence of human nature as we feel it ought to be and trust it will be."

Then calling to her aid an author now almost forgotten, and quoting without break what is here reproduced only in part, she says:

"A worthy account of the vocation and duties of the journalist is given by Cornelius Matthews:

"As shakes the canvas of a thousand ships Struck by the heavy land breeze far at sea, Ruffle the thousand broad sheets of the land Filled with the people's breath of potency,
How beautiful who scatters wide and free
The gold bright seeds of loved and loving truth,
There is an inviolate life in every hour, Fit to be chronicled at large and told;
'Tis time to pluck to light its secret power,
And on the air its many colored heart unfold."

Foresaw Better Methods

How fine, too, is her concluding comment, especially when it is remembered that she wrote nearly 70 years ago:

"This feeling of the dignity of his office, the honor and power of fulfilling it, are not common in the journalist but, when they exist, a mark has been left fully correspondent to the weight of the instrument. . . . It is wonderful that more do not learn the use of this great opportunity. It will be learned yet: the resources of this organ of thought and instruction begin to be understood and shall yet be brought out and used worthily."

Evidently this was not one of the articles written "on the spur of the occasion," and notwithstanding its somewhat old fashioned phrasing and at times a touch of tentativeness belonging to that earlier period of woman's activities, it is still a word of value.

HAPPY LITTLE ITALIAN GIRLS TAKE PAUL REVERE'S BIG RIDE

On Trolley Cars They Spin Through the Country, See Places Famous in American History, Sing Songs, Eat Lunches and Pick Pretty Wild Flowers

"Say, what's all this?" queried a small messenger boy as with considerable difficulty he tried to make his way through a long line of excited little girls who stood waiting for the signal from their teachers to board the five trolleys that stood in Canal street yesterday afternoon.

"We're going where Paul Revere went, and we won't be back till 5 o'clock," replied an obliging black-eyed damsel who wore gay pink hair ribbons and carried a lunch box of mammoth size. And with that she started for the nearest trolley, for the signal had been given and, duly and all the other 300 little girls started too, not in wild disorder as might have been expected, but each group keeping close to the teacher in charge and as close to each other as the huge lunch boxes would permit. Ten minutes later they were going over a bridge and the various teachers were saying to the children in the different cars, "Look, this is where the boats come in from Italy."

That was the beginning of a wonderful day for those little Italian girls, all of them from the "steamer" classes of the Paul Revere school. They had heard about Paul Revere at school and at the Old South meeting house where an illustrated lecture had been given them in April and now they were actually to go over the same road, so that thereafter they would never forget how American liberty had its beginning, and why April 19 is made a holiday.

There was so very much to see on the way, so much that was new, so much that meant nothing at all until the teachers had explained what it was, that the beribboned heads were kept bobbing every minute. First there was the navy yard with a real marine standing at the gate; then there was Bunker Hill mounment in the distance; then there was the old powder house almost hidden among the trees on the hill; and after a long time there was the house of Jonathan Harrington, the last man of the battle of Lexington.

As it happened the cars stopped for a long time before this house, long enough indeed for one of the girls to get off at the teacher's order and run up close to read the dates on the tablet. And then without anybody hinting that it might be appropriate, suddenly everybody began to sing "Union Forever," and it is safe to say that when another trolley passed by and all the people looked out to see what was going on not one of them guessed that those happy little girls who were singing with so much gusto "While we rally round the flag, boys," were Italian children, some of whom had not been in this country more than a few months.

They might have guessed it a little later, however, for some one started "Santa Lucia" and of course every one joined in, the melodious Italian words contrasting strangely enough with the vigorous "Shouting the Battle Cry of Freedom," which had just preceded.

There was plenty of singing all the rest of the long happy day. "The Star Spangled Banner," "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," all had their turns, and "Santa Lucia" had many, many turns too. When the children stood beside the high flag pole on Lexington common and Miss Colleton had explained to them why this place was called the birthplace of American liberty they sang of course; how else were they to express their feelings?

It was noon before they got to Concord square. Then there was a walk to the battlefield by the bridge, and oh, joy! permission from the teachers to open the lunch boxes. Not that some of them had not been opened before, but this was the appointed time when every one could sit on the grass and eat everything that remained. And eat they did, and refreshed themselves a dozen times at the bubble fountain placed right there for their convenience. Then the teachers each took their own classes down to the bridge and told them all about the statue of the minute man, and finally Miss Colleton took the group who have been here such a short time they can scarcely understand English, and she told them the same story in Italian. And the way their eyes shone with delight made it seem that perhaps they appreciated that story even more than those who had heard it in English.

Hollis hall was built in 1763, as it was found that many students were obliged to live in private families instead of in the college dormitories.

Flowers Allure

In the mean time there had been many sallies into nearby fields for buttercups and daisies and wild geraniums, so now that the patriotic lessons of the day were practically over, the teachers led their bands away to where there were fields in abundance. Three o'clock came almost too soon, and carrying bouquets instead of lunch boxes, which by the way had been put with papers and strings into proper places and not strewn about the ground, the children once again boarded the cars and at 5 o'clock landed in Boston, still singing.

"While we rally round the flag, boys, We rally once again, Shouting the battle-cry of freedom."

If only the members of the Old South Meeting House Corporation who gave them this trip could have been there to see and hear, they would have learned at first hand the value of such an experience to the immigrant child receiving in this unforgettable way a lesson in American patriotism.

But there are other lessons learned on that trip, lessons in geography and agriculture, for the children know that went through Charlestown, Somerville, Lexington, Bedford and on to Concord; they saw hills, woods, windmills and streams; they saw men plowing, sowing and mowing. Next week in school they will be questioned about these sights so that the impressions may not be forgotten. They know now as they could not know before that Paul Revere's ride was a very long ride; and they know, too, that in the United States there are beautiful woodland places and farms as well as cities with crowded streets and hot pavements. Even the youngest of them has a happy memory to take with her through the summer, for when some one asked this wee maid if she had had a good time, she nodded shyly and then said, "But the best was picking the flowers."

MOLIERE COMEDY GIVEN WITH OPERA

Somerset Maugham's Adaptation of "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme" and Strauss Piece "Ariadne in Naxos" Presented at His Majesty's Theater

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON—M. Jourdain is in his way an idealist, only his imagination, like most men's, happens to be weak. Snobishness is an inversion of a noble aspiration. To aim at the highest when we see it, is generally considered a meritorious attitude of mind. It demands personal humility, and an exalted sense of externals present to most of us all that there is, so our soul-felt ambitions are given to objects not entirely worthy. The worthy bourgeois of Moliere's comedy lived at a time when to hint that the King existed for the people, and not the people for the King, was regarded as little less than heresy. To hear that his name had been mentioned at a levee, was to M. Jourdain a gratification amounting to a devotional ecstasy. And then these beings of another order, gentlemen, privileged to move in the presence of the sun of France, how unmistakable they were!

SENATE BOARD HURRIES WORK IN COAL FIELD

West Virginia Strike Inquires Make Ready to Hear Operators Tell Their Side Next Week—Mine Guards Accused

PEACE EFFORTS TOLD

CHARLESTON, W. Va.—All today's witnesses before the Senate strike investigators are being hurried through their testimony so that next week the committee can hear the side of the coal companies. The witnesses for the miners said today that the armed mine guards caused all of the trouble. Had they been kept out they said there would have been little rioting.

C. O. Honaker, conductor on the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad, testified that Baldwin-Feltz guards rode over the road between the main line and the end of the Paint Creek branch in the coal region in charge of new miners without having to pay fare until April 30 of this year. Since then they have ridden on passes, he said, and gave the committee the names of the guards and number of their passes. This contradicted the declaration of the operators, that the guards have been removed from the region. He said the guards carried their pistols openly.

Former Governor Glascock was recalled today and cross-examined by the attorneys for the operators, who tried to show by him that the first disorder started in a union camp outside of the present strike zone. The Governor said this was so.

Mr. Glascock again asserted emphatically that the real cause of the trouble was the mine guards. Mr. Glascock said that he tried to arbitrate the difficulty. The miners, he said, not only were willing to arbitrate, but signed an agreement to do so. The operators, however, positively refused.

"Then the operators blocked this plan?" asked Senator Kenyon.

"They were the only obstacle." The report of the Governor's strike commission was then read into the record which declared that when the operators refused to take any steps which might by inference recognize the union, the union promptly waived the question of recognition.

And whence came their perfect assurance? Being a man of business he felt he must get a knowledge of a gentleman's stock in trade, and so, with heroic endeavor, he set industriously about to acquire it.

Social Basis in Question

His was the point of view of the ordinary man, the vulgar man, who exists in the court and the gutter, and whose perception takes him no further than the things that he sees. Jourdain could not realize that the assurance of a gentleman is based on a conviction that to be born in a certain status gives one a position that is absolutely unassailable. It is an innate consciousness, founded on a belief that privileges are by divine right. The gentlemen at the court of Louis XIV., with an outlook just as vulgar as Jourdain's, jostled one another for the smallest privileges; and, by so doing, they denied their birthright, demonstrating by their acquisitiveness that it rested on a foundation of accessories. History laughs at the pretensions of the "first gentleman of Europe," yet gives indifferently to a slave, an emperor, or a saint, a place in that select garden where none can enter but those who have proved, beyond cavil the royalty of their lineage.

It is not the purpose in this article to speak of the music, or to tell with what lively dances tailors and cooks brought in the garments of M. Jourdain, or the viands that were to grace the table of this gentleman. It should be said, however, that the comedy, as it was given, was certainly enlivened by Richard Strauss.

Somerset Maugham's translation is not particularly distinguished, but he and Sir Herbert Tree work very well together. The M. Jourdain at His Majesty's is frankly a buffoon. Sir Herbert plays him in much the same way as he did "Isidore Izard," only with those exaggerations one connects with the broadest farce. The actor, indeed, shows his usual ingenuity in discovering ways and means of getting laughs, and is on the whole successful in being extremely ludicrous. Still it is fortunate for some players that there are those "who are so loosely put together that a wink will shake them." Miss Neilson-Terry and Mr. Merivale did very gracefully the little they had to do as Dorimene and Dorante, and the rest of the company worked very hard in parts that revolved round the center figure.

The staging and accessories were all, as usual, very fine indeed. During the performance of the opera, "Ariadne in Naxos," which M. Jourdain gives in honor of his guests, the players in the comedy sat on one side of a stage which was built on to the stage itself—the honest bourgeois sleeping through most of the performance. The production has aroused the greatest interest, and, in spite of the prices being raised considerably, this enterprise of Sir Herbert's and Mr. Beecham's has succeeded in drawing immense audiences to His Majesty's theater.

Composer's Humor Shown to Have Come Close at Times to Triviality

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON—It will be remembered that Heine said about the women writers of his day, that they invariably wrote with one eye on the public, and the exception, who had only one eye, will be remembered. Dr. Richard Strauss and Herr von Hofmannsthal certainly had both eyes fixed firmly on the public when they wrote "Ariadne in Naxos." They know what the public wants. The public itself never has the least idea of what it really does want or what it does not want. It leaves all that to the managers and impresarios, just as it relegates the troublesome matter of government to the professional politician. And it is whispered that these exalted personages in moments of privacy and candor have been known to express an opinion of the public even more Carlylean than that held by the great Thomas himself. When the average opera-goer heard the waltz tune in "Rosenkavalier" and found a libretto that was almost as good as a play, he or she was delighted at escaping somewhat from the longueurs inseparable from a visit to the opera, and "Rosenkavalier" became the biggest financial success ever known in the history of grand opera management. It is difficult not to think that "Ariadne in Naxos" is an attempt to repeat this success.

Shaw Quoted George Bernard Shaw once shrewdly said: "Art for art's sake means in practice Success for money's sake. Great art is never produced for its own sake. It is too difficult to be worth the effort. All the great artists enter into a terrible struggle with the public, often involving bitter poverty and personal humiliation, and always involving calumny and persecution, because they believe they are apostles doing what used to be called the will of God, and are now called by many prosaic names, of which 'public work' is the least controversial. And when these artists have traveled and brought forth, and at last forced the public to associate their pleasure and deep interest with their methods and morals, a crowd of smaller men—art confectioners, we may call them—hasten to make pretty entertainments out of scraps and crumbs from the masterpieces. And these confectioners are by no means plagiarists. They bring all sorts of engaging qualities to their work—love of beauty, desire to give pleasure, tenderness, humor, everything except the high republican conscience, the identification of the artist's purpose with the purpose of the universe, which alone makes the artist great."

Ideals Compared

Strauss, who began by being a genius, is in serious danger of becoming a mere talent, or, to use Shaw's term, an art confectioner, who makes pretty entertainments out of the scraps and crumbs taken from the masterpieces, not of others, but his own. At one time it seemed as if the mantle of Richard Wagner had fallen on Richard Strauss, but the years only show a tremendous divergence in aims and ideals. Wagner's works are like a chain of mountain peaks rising ever higher. From "Rienzi" they ascend to "Parsifal." Verdi, to the astonishment of the musical world, wrote "Falstaff," incomparably his finest work, when he was in his eightieth year. But then, Wagner and Verdi gave the public what they sincerely believed the public ought to want. And that makes all the difference. The real significance of Strauss' decline lies precisely in this divarication of attitude concerning art. True art is closely allied to true religion and is inseparable from the highest idealism. What Tolstoy called exclusive art, art which appeals exclusively to one class and not to humanity as a whole, can never be true art, which invariably has this characteristic, that it always unites and never divides. The trouble with most of the art of the present day is that it has no real democratic basis. Too often it is regarded, by the artist and the public alike, as the luxury of a privileged class, rather than the common heritage of all mankind.

"Ariadne in Naxos" is an example, par excellence, of this exclusive art. Every device that two men of world-wide reputation can conceive is used for the diversion of that most blasé of all social gatherings, a modern audience at the opera. And perhaps the nastiest stroke in the whole work is where this audience, and its attitude towards art, is satirized on the stage in the persons of M. Jourdain and his aristocratic guests who are regaled with a performance of opera-ballet as a pendant to a good dinner.

The opera is scored for a small orchestra of 37, including a piano, a harmonium, and the inevitable celesta. A harmonium (the tendency of the work as a whole cannot but be regretted, there are, now and then, some delightful things in a score which is saturated with Strauss' peculiar and always obvious musical humor. The pity of it is that one of the most extraordinary minds in modern music should absorb itself in such trivialities. There are moments in Ariadne's opening scene, where the earlier and greater Strauss speaks, passages that rise to sheer beauty, but, for the rest, the less said about this disappointing production the better.

DEDHAM NAMES COMMITTEE ON A NEW HIGH SCHOOL

DEDHAM, Mass.—Moderator Frederic J. Grady, acting by vote of the town, has named these committees:

Erastus Worthington, Frederic C. Cobb and Arthur L. Moseley to revise and correct the names of the streets of the town.

Henry M. Hutchings, James R. Delaney, Samuel H. Capen, Charles E. Ziegler and John E. Shaugnessy, to consider the town's needs for the same and the probable cost of building with land, the committee to make a preliminary report in print not later than Nov. 1, 1913.

Harry I. Cummings, Charles H. Hodgson and William J. C. Mullen to obtain and consider plans for a concrete bridge over Mother brook on Central street, East Dedham.

Dr. Edward Knobel, Joseph Morrill and Herbert L. McClean, to investigate and report on a method of collecting the town's ashes.

Joseph H. Soliday, Henry M. Grady, Bernard Hutchins Whitney, Francis W. Welch, Edward W. Finn and Walter H. Young as trustees of the Capen and McQuillen funds.

WRECK RESULT IS BLOCK SIGNALS

Block signals have been ordered by the board of railroad commissioners to be installed on the West Quinary branch of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, coming as a result of this town's investigation of the wreck at West Quinary station, April 28, 1913.

Penny Pies Baked and Sold With Profit in Pennsylvania Town

Unique Industry Thrives in Reading Through the Children's Demand for Goodies Obtainable With Small Coin

YEARLY OUTPUT 65,000

READING, Pa.—There are two women in this city, both wives and mothers, who make a livelihood in the odd avocation of baking tiny pies for others. These pies they sell, in the one case for a apiece and in the other case four for five cents. The customers are satisfied, and so are the bakers. The former get a good, wholesome article, and the two women just enough profit out of it to partly, or in whole, support their households.

The tiny-pie industry in Reading was started by Mrs. Hannah Irving. Some 11 years ago her husband passed away in Kansas, and after she lived for some time in Iowa, Delaware and Pennsylvania towns she finally settled in Reading. She had recourse to various means to support herself, including working for other families, doing household work, and by making taffy, which she sold to the children who attended a school across the street from her little two-room home.

One day, while baking, she had a little dough left, and not wishing to throw it away she took three little pans, 3½ inches in diameter and an inch deep, and here she placed the dough and sweetened crumbs and baked little crumb cakes. Just as they were finished along came a schoolgirl for candy. When the girl saw the little cake she begged to have it, instead of the candy, and offered her cent in payment. Two more were left, and in less than five minutes two other girls appeared and bought the other two.

Popular at Once

Nearly the entire school was at the door of Mrs. Irving's little home the next morning and begged that instead of making candy she should bake pies and cakes for them. She was rather reluctant to make a promise, and told them to let her consider the proposition. When the week-end came she pondered long on Saturday evening to see if she could really afford to bake penny pies and cakes. She figured every little article that would have to be purchased, and concluded that if they could be sold

she could earn enough to be fairly recompensed. When the time came to give the school children an answer she showed them a hundred nice little pies and equally as many "shoo-fly" cakes. By evening of that day every cake was sold, and she had $2 in her pocket in pennies. That was 11 years ago, and she has averaged since that time 65,000 pies and cakes a year, and her banner year's product was over 110,000.

Mrs. Eva Snyder is the other pie woman in Reading. She is the working-man's friend, because her pies find their way into the dinner pails of the average daily wage workers and into the lunch boxes of hundreds of clerks. She has been at the baking of those delicious articles commercially for only two years, and her debut was also made through circumstances rather than by design.

She learned how to bake and cook at a farm house as a hired girl. She married and, at 26 was left with four little sons to care for. She again worked for the farmers as cook, and did the weekly baking, earning enough to support her children. For 17 years she toiled thus, then she became the wife of David A. Snyder, a grocer, who attends the Reading markets weekly.

Guest Remembers

One day Mr. Snyder came home from market and said that a customer asked if he would not consent to bake for him a few pies and potato cakes such as he had tasted while a guest at their home. She consented, but little did she think that making half a dozen pies, which were sold to the customer at 15 cents each, and as many potato cakes at 12 cents each, would open a road to a new avocation. But it did. The demand became so great that she sold hundreds of the larger size pies and cakes.

Then she gave thought to the problems of her workingmen customers. A pie costing 15 cents, during the era of "high cost of living," was nearly out of the question. So she also adopted the size Mrs. Irving was baking for the school children, but she put a greater quantity of peaches, apples, or raisins in them and charged at the rate of four for five cents. They fitted the working-men's dinner pail nicely, and they were delicious enough to satisfy them for the daily dessert. The cakes and pies have become so popular that during the two years that she has been baking them she has sold 26,330 of the smaller ones, 856 large ones and 915 potato cakes, besides small cup cakes and custards, of which she kept no account.

Both women have used peaches, apricots, grapes, blackberries, huckleberries, raisins, mince, spiced tomatoes, apples and plums in baking their pies, and use nothing but the best flour, so that they will at all times be up to the requirements of the pure food law.

In both cases the penny pies have presented another way of making a livelihood and homes happy. In the Snyder

PRESIDENTS AVENUE IN CAPITAL MAY BE ADORNED WITH BUSTS

WASHINGTON—A memorial will be sent to the next Congress by a committee composed of residents of the Avenue of the Presidents, asking permission to place along the two sides of this avenue bust statues of all the presidents and vice-presidents of the United States, to be paid for without the aid of Congress or of the District of Columbia.

The reasons for erecting these bust statues, it is explained, are as follows:

With proper management, the Avenue of the Presidents is destined to become one of the most splendid residential avenues in our country, and at the head of it, looking down—or rather looking up—a long vista, have lived all the Presidents of the United States, with the exception of one.

Heretofore in the national capital, there has been a noticeable neglect of memorial statues for our Presidents or for our American statesmen generally, it is pointed out.

It is considered that first class bust statues are especially suitable for men in civilian apparel, since that dress does not lend itself well to full length statues.

The committee in charge proposes that these statues be of bronze, with pedestals of light colored granite, thus continuing the scheme of material adopted for the statues in Lafayette square, also that they be of uniform size and placed at equal distances apart as far as possible, one at the center of each square, and near the curbing, in the line of tree boxes.

The committee also understands that all of these works of art are to be subject to the approval of the art commission which was lately appointed by Congress to judge all our future statues. The committee believes that these presidential and vice-presidential statues, placed in chronological order along the two sides of the avenue will not only serve to recognize important service to our country, but will have an educational value.

Avenue of the Presidents is the most fitting situation for such a series of busts, in that it is a broad and central boulevard leading directly from the White House to Rock Creek park. It is especially well adapted for decorations, being 160 feet wide and seven miles long, containing on either side a double row of trees and 40 feet of parking, furnishing, therefore, an ideal setting for such statues.

As many of these memorial presidential busts would likely be replicas, and the expense of reproducing them in bronze comparatively small, the committee feels that they can be paid for by relatives, societies, admirers, and by state legislatures, without taxing our federal or district governments.

Most artesian water supplies consist simply of water-filled strata or sandstone or other porous rock material, through which the water very slowly percolates, confined from above and below by other strata of impervious rock or clay.

Through this inclosed layer of porous rock the water works its way with infinite slowness, following the dip or slant of the rock, and where tapped coming to the surface, if the surface at this point be below the source of the supply.

Coarse sandstone is capable of holding a great quantity of water, as much as six quarts per cubic foot; but the rate of the movement through this rock is so slow as to be almost inappreciable.

To illustrate how slowly the water travels: Many artesian or flowing wells are found along the Potomac river at Colonial beach and other points in Virginia, about 60 miles south of Washington. This water is obtained by drilling into a sandstone formation which extends along the Potomac valley and into Maryland and outcrops near Frederick, Md., some 50 miles north of Washington.

COTTON STALKS MAY BE TURNED TO REAL PAPER

Information has come recently from the South tending to show that chemists and savants have taught men of capital of the South that it is possible to utilize the waste woods of the lumber mills in such manner as to make a kind of paper of good marketable quality, says the Wall Street Journal.

Many men have been working at this problem and along similar lines. That they have succeeded so far as to justify men of capital going to considerable expense in making experimental tests is proved by a venture about to be made by Burdett Loomis at Hartford, Conn.

In the little city of Waycross, Ga., Mr. Loomis purposes establishing a paper mill. He has found a manufacturing plant that has been in disuse for some time, which he regards as available for his experiment. He is to equip his plant with paper-making machinery.

UNDERGROUND RIVER WATERS FOUND TO FLOW MILE A YEAR

Artesian basins, or the underground water supply which furnishes artesian wells with their constantly flowing streams, sometimes spouting to a considerable height above the surface, are often popularly referred to as "subterranean rivers," which are believed to "flow" at great depths, eventually finding their way to the surface to feed some visible stream, according to the Scientific American.

Most artesian water supplies consist simply of water-filled strata or sandstone or other porous rock material, through which the water very slowly percolates, confined from above and below by other strata of impervious rock or clay.

Through this inclosed layer of porous rock the water works its way with infinite slowness, following the dip or slant of the rock, and where tapped coming to the surface, if the surface at this point be below the source of the supply.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE IN NEED OF MONEY

FRANKLIN, Ind.—The people of Franklin and Johnson county are seeking a permanent endowment of about $600,000 for Franklin College. The people of Franklin are expected to subscribe $20,000, and $10,000 is expected from the county.

About $140,000 is yet to be raised by July 1 in order that the college may receive $73,000 from the general educational board of New York.

ARIZONA IRRIGATION WORK COMPLETE

Irrigation promises to turn certain heretofore unsuitable sections of Arizona into most valuable farming land. For the past five years the United States government has been expending energy and money on a project just completed, and that includes the damming of the Colorado river at a place where this turbulent stream is 4780 feet in width.

Yuma is right in the center of the country that is to be stirred into unsurpassed agricultural activity. A R. Kanaga, who has recently visited the section and has had much experience with irrigation undertakings in other parts of the world, gives his impressions as follows:

"Water is now being poured into the main canal and goes thence to the laterals, and is finding its way on to hundreds of farms. As yesterday and today I rode over the country, it presented a scene so animated that it reminded me of the work in the Nile in Egypt when I last visited that country. For here in this district I see men at work plowing, harrowing, sowing and checking up land, and when I was first here in January of this year I found a clover huffer at work and it reminded me of my past days in Ohio when they threshed out their clover crop in September each year. "This project will irrigate 125,000 acres of valley land and more than 50,000 acres of mesa land, and white water is now available for the loam lands."

"Farmers are coming here from all parts of the country and I met families here from Dakota, Minnesota, Ohio and a dozen eastern cities. What will they grow in this country? Why, almost anything that can be produced in any state in this Union. Alfalfa and cotton will be at the head, and cattle raising and dairying will be next with all kind of diversified farming."

"The project here costs $7,000,000 but it will be money well spent and it will come back to the people tenfold in value for it is the richest of all the 28 government irrigation enterprises."

Mr. Kanaga is of the opinion that orange culture will be one of the leading pursuits of some of the farmers now buying up land around Yuma. He believes that the country is admirably adapted for the purpose and that the mesa dis-irrigated will soon be covered with orange groves.

There have been many difficulties connected with the engineering problem in the sections concerned. United States en-

NATURE GROWS UMBRELLA HANDLES IN MANY FORMS

There is always to be found in shops a seemingly unending variety of shapes, sizes and forms of wooden umbrella handles, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The remarkable thing about most of the more expensive wooden handles is that they are not formed at a bench by any skilled wood worker, but rather they are formed at Nature's workbench.

A great deal of this is done in France, where men are expert in the art of planting certain shrubs and training the shoots to grow in circles, figure eights, shepherd crooks and the hundred and one other odd shapes. Ash is one of the best of woods for this purpose because its tough, pliable fibers lend themselves so well to being bent into various sharp angles and curves. But other wood, such as maple, chestnut and birch, are also used.

The young trees are planted just as any one would plant trees to sell for gardens, but at the end of the first year after being planted they are cut back, rather short, which causes shoots to put out down around the bottoms. Then the lower branches are cut and only a plume of leaves left on the tops of the trees.

Then these artists in wood begin work on the sprouts, cutting the bark, carving them, bending the tender ends in various shapes and securing them. They are not cut sufficiently to kill them and the sap running into these slight carvings causes the wood to swell and the designs are thus enlarged by nature.

Three years' growth is now needed. At the end of that time this little forest of umbrella handles is cut. Of course, there are hundreds of such little trees planted each year, so there is a large annual crop. These handles after being cut are first dried in the sun and given a sort of vapor bath, after which, being thus softened, they are peeled out into desired lengths, given a few finishing touches as to carving and sent to the umbrella makers, where they are varnished or polished and attached to the umbrellas.

Sometimes squares or oboles or circles of hardwood are used, the tender shoot being trained to grow around it. At the end of the three years the block is removed, leaving the shoot in the handle form which it will always retain.

"But here at Yuma is an oasis in the desert. Yuma in five years will rank as the best irrigation enterprise in the West."

TOURS ABROAD FOR STUDENTS IN GROUPS HAVE ADVANTAGES

AMERICAN appreciation of what is to be gained from travel in other lands has led to several interesting experiments as to the best means for absorbing and making practical what such peregrinations offer the American traveler. It can no longer be said that the greater number of people make little use of their far-away journeyings. In most instances a trip away from home is an education in itself.

In respect to boys ranging from say, 16 to 21 years of age, much good has been accomplished where such youths have been sent abroad with tutor or have accompanied their parents.

In recent years, however, the method has been tried of sending groups to foreign lands where sightseeing and study have been followed out with striking success. At a time when international affairs are coming closer and closer to America, in business and in the professions, direct contact between the youths of the land and the people of other countries must necessarily prove helpful to a satisfactory future intercourse between nations.

Discussing the leading features of a tour by young people who in this fashion continued their school studies, Stanwood Cobb, who has just returned from a journey covering eight months, during which time he assisted in carrying out an educational program, said:

"When a student is put in direct contact with the thing to be studied it is really wonderful how readily he grasps the meaning of the thing itself. Let us say that the first place reached by our American travelers is Italy. Here, of course, those bent on careers of art will find their chief source of delight and benefit. But even those other students who are inclined toward commercial or industrial pursuits are bound to be impressed by what comes before them. Beauty should enter into every avocation. The history of a country, its language, the custom of the people, all lend themselves to this study of things right on the ground."

To understand better what these juvenile travelers are expected to obtain from such journeyings it is quite necessary to take a look at what the group in question consisted of. We had with us the son of a banker, the son of one of the greatest oyster dealers in the country, a leather manufacturer, the owner of a big apple orchard out West, a newspaper publisher and editor, and so on.

"I was especially impressed by what this young prospective newspaper man would gain from his tour. American journalism is progressive, it is true, but we have not so far developed—very great interest in the doings of other nations. It is easy to see that as soon as this young man is placed in a position of responsibility in his father's business, or takes over the paper, that he must be better equipped for handling international affairs, or judging the handling of such affairs by others, than if he had never studied other countries at first hand."

"It is true that had he traveled alone or in the company of his parents he would have learned a great deal. But in the present instance he was taken care of in particular, and inclinations and desires as to journalism in other lands catered to systematically."

Mr. Cobb remarked that city planning, which has shown such striking signs of progress, was looked into abroad with the greatest interest by the young Americans.

"In some instances it was a complete revelation to discover that such things as slums were not known in certain localities," he said. "Clean streets, comfortable quarters for the working classes, a general atmosphere of cooperation, so as to make the outward appearance of a community typify what it was at bottom, confronted us especially in Germany."

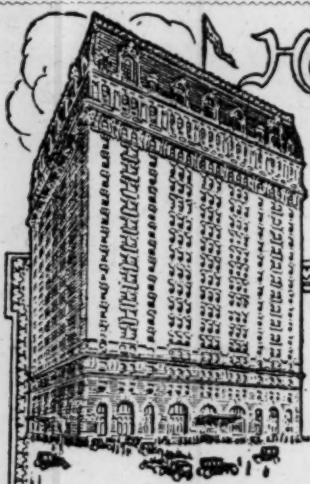

"Going singly abroad it is to be doubted whether these youthful American travelers would have read the lesson in the same degree as when they were told the meaning of this civic progress, this cooperative method for making a city beautiful on the spot. There should be some very energetic civic workers in various American communities when these youths reach the age when it is expected that they shall give the best that is in them as worth-while citizens."

Courses

From grammar school to college. Certificate accepted by leading colleges and scientific schools. Unusual teaching force with a college trained male teacher to every 12 boys, providing not only special help in subjects which any boy finds difficult, but also individual care for each boy in the work and play of the school. Any boy may, if desired, learn to earn a living while doing the regular school work.

Character Building

There is an exceptional spirit of comradeship between the teachers and the boys. Both the work and play of the students are carefully directed by a trained instructor, who is not only a teacher, but a friend of the boy.

If desired, the student may remain at the school from 9 until 5, and during this entire period he is under the personal care of a member of the faculty.

Vocational Schools

In connection with the academic work of the school, there are courses in many forms of Scientific and Manual Training.

Each boy can learn not only to use his hands, but obtain a really practical education in the Arts, Crafts and Sciences.

An extensive equipment in Laboratories and Shops offers this exceptional opportunity for the boy.

Athletics

Four acres for Buildings and Athletic Field.
Baseball.
Football.
Basket Ball.
Tennis.
Hockey.
Swimming.
Track and Field Events.
All athletics carefully directed by trained specialists.

School Life

Chorus Singing, in charge of a noted choral director.

THE PRINCIPIA

This Message is to Parents Who Know the Value of Character

Upward Growth and true development in right habits of thought and action are prime needs in school life. These make the men and women of to-morrow.

Ideals are the aim in The Principia, which has for fifteen years been transforming them into character. The best school life is that in which the home is most worthily exemplified. Here boys and girls can grow up together as comrades and friends. Genuine manliness and womanliness are cultivated in our carefully guarded home life.

Six Modern Buildings house this school. All grades from the kindergarten through the high school are taught by competent teachers. Small classes permit special attention to individual needs. Well equipped rooms are used for laboratory work in physics and chemistry, art, sewing, cooking, manual training, and all the other departments of a thoroughly modern educational institution.

Public Speaking debating, drama, music, and art are part of the daily work. Students may prepare for college or business. The standard of work is high and the academic training is of the best.

A PROSPECTUS WILL BE MAILED ON APPLICATION TO

THE PRINCIPIA . . . St. Louis, Mo.

The Gymnasium contains a large drill floor, swimming pool and bowling alley, besides a complete equipment. The ten-acre campus in the best residential section of the city is most attractive. Three tennis courts and baseball field are well utilized. The running track is over 1000 feet long.

Our Military Dept. is of especial value. We give a thorough course in camp life, company formations, and the manual of arms. We emphasize military courtesy and honor. The organization on a battalion basis gives opportunity to develop in the boys capacity to take responsibility. Department and executive ability are the chief factors in the choice of our cadet officers.

St. Louis is the most centrally located of any city of its size in the United States. Canada, Mexico, and twenty three states of the Union are represented on the Principia rolls. The school, therefore, affords an unusually cosmopolitan life. Because its students are carefully selected it furnishes only the best companions for good homes.

Manor School for Boys

STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT

LOCATION On Shippan Point, eighty feet above the water of Long Island Sound. A wonderful combination of land and water. Every room in main building commands a view of the water. Fifteen acres of lawn, garden and orchard. The scenery is beautiful and the situation is ideal for a boarding school.

BUILDINGS Beautiful modern dormitory, with running hot and cold water in every sleeping room. Gymnasium 100x50 feet, with basketball courts, bowling alleys, etc. School building with large study hall, class rooms, chemical and physical laboratory, manual training shops, etc. Large and attractive cottage for a limited number of younger boys.

ATHLETICS Every facility for football, basketball and baseball. The school has a remarkable athletic record, having won twice in succession the Inter-Preparatory League Baseball championship, and gained many notable victories in basketball and in football. During the past year the school had, besides its regular football team, four basketball teams and three baseball teams, all playing regular schedules, thus insuring the participation of a large number of boys in athletic activities.

SCHOOL WORK A faculty of experienced college-bred teachers, working together work. Weekly summing up of each boy's progress and careful consideration of each pupil's needs means the efficient handling of the particular problem of every boy's development. Under our system boys acquire a real live interest in their work, learn to apply themselves and gain a thorough preparation for college or for business.

HOME LIFE The school offers a real home to its pupils. The "institutional" atmosphere is not only absent, but "harmonious" and "homelike" are the terms most frequently applied by parents and those who visit the school.

MORAL TRAINING This school honestly endeavors to impart to its pupils the fundamental moral principles of right living. It aims to give to every boy the intellectual and moral development of his charges; it stands ready to help a boy to fight his battles, to control his passions, to resist temptation, to stand by his principles, to solve problems and a sympathy with the struggles of life. It endeavors to develop the confidence of every pupil, young or old, and to stand by him in distress, to be patient with him in defeat, and to rejoice with him in victory.

RESULTS Manor graduates are today in all the leading colleges of the country. Some of them have gained distinction for high scholarship or along literary lines; others have made their mark in business life. Harvard has received more than any other college, Yale, Princeton, Columbia, University of Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Dartmouth, Amherst, Leland Stanford and other leading colleges and universities can attest the effectiveness of our methods. In business, too, many of our former pupils are occupying positions of trust and responsibility.

ADVERTISEMENT WRITING
As a Money-Making Business

Big demand—small supply—high salaries paid. There is a constant search for capable writers of advertising (men or women) by department stores and advertising agencies everywhere; also by a steadily increasing number of manufacturers and merchants. If you have a good common school education, write to us for particulars of our correspondence system of instruction. More than one of our graduates has a $10,000 a year salary. Enroll once as a student of our ESTABLISHED and SUCCESSFUL course and rise to greater abilities and double or quadruple your present income.

THE MONITOR says of the Powell Course: "It is thoroughly established and successful. Its books show the names of students who have won prizes in all parts of this country, but in South Africa, Mexico and New Zealand, by means of its system of teaching advertising by correspondence, distance is rendered of no consequence."

"The Powell Course may be taken to advantage by the use of one's ordinary spare time, without interfering with existing employment or income."

Major Drake of Whitman will speak and conduct the meeting at the Methodist Episcopal church Sunday evening.

Charles H. Lytle will preach the baccalaureate sermon for the senior class of the high school in the assembly hall tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock.

CHELSEA

Members of the Central church Sunday school are holding their annual picnic at Salem Willows today.

Promotion exercises of the Bible school of the First Congregational church will be held in the church vestry tomorrow afternoon. The Young People's Society of this church will hold their last meeting for the season at the Soldiers home tomorrow afternoon.

READING

More than 1,000,000 trout fry have been liberated in the past week in ponds and streams in and about this town and more are to come soon. Arden M. Allen has charge of the stocking.

Boy Scouts company of this town will be the guests of the North Reading grange next Wednesday evening, at a special Boy Scouts entertainment.

WAKEFIELD

The Improvement Association has petitioned the selectmen to place three waste paper and refuse barrels at central points in the square.

The Girls' Debating Society of the high school has elected Miss Marion Mansfield president, Miss Margaret O'Connor vice-president, Miss Mildred Carlson secretary, and Miss Mildred Mellett treasurer.

QUINCY

Mrs. George F. Spooner has been elected president of the Riverside Woman's Club in place of Mrs. Carolyn B. Mellen, resigned.

Children's day will be observed at the Wollaston Unitarian, West Methodist Episcopal, First Universalist and Wollaston Methodist Episcopal churches tomorrow.

REVERE

Neptune lodge, I. O. O. F., will attend services in a body at the Methodist church tomorrow morning.

The state bath house will be opened for the season tomorrow.

WEYMOUTH

Extensive alterations and repairs are being made at the Central fire station, including building a stairway on the outside for entrance to the hall.

CONSTRUCTION OF AUGUSTA Y. M. C. A. TO BEGIN AT ONCE

AUGUSTA, Me.—R. J. Noyes of this city has been awarded the contract for the construction of the new Y. M. C. A. building. The contract covers the building complete ready for equipment, including heating, lighting, plumbing and grading. The preliminary work of excavation will begin at once. Nearly a year will be required for the completion of the building. Louis E. Jallade of New York is the architect.

The building fronts on Winthrop street and is three stories in height. The left wing on State street and the right on Winthrop court are two stories. Between the wings is an open court.

The building will be constructed of red brick. It is of Colonial design, and the Colonial porches, entrances and windows give a residential appearance.

G. A. R. ASSOCIATION HOLDS FIELD DAY

HOLYOKE, Mass.—The Western Massachusetts Grand Army Association held its twenty-first annual field day and basket picnic at the state armory on Sargeant street yesterday. The first business was the reading of reports. Following the lunch officers were elected, the elections resulting as follows: President, A. M. Cain of Holyoke; secretary, Mrs. Corrie A. Emerson of Florence; treasurer, George H. Lynds of Holyoke. There were 147 present from Holyoke, Springfield, Northampton, Westfield, Easthampton, Palmer, Ware, South Hadley Falls, Amherst, Pittsfield and Monson.

Department Commander Thomas Ames of Boston was among the guests, as was also Mrs. Laura I. Smith of Attleboro, department senior vice-president of the Woman's Relief Corps, and Assistant Adj.-Gen. W. A. Wetherbee. At the afternoon session the joint entertainment was given by the association and the Hampshire and Hampden county Woman's Relief Corps Associations.

ABINGTON

Manamooskeag council, D. of P., entertained Deputy Grand Pochontas Mrs. Mabel Forbes and suite of North Attleboro at its meeting last evening.

The Sons of Veterans Dramatic Club presented the drama, "Red Acre Farm," at Mayflower grove, Pembroke, Friday evening.

RANDOLPH

The Sunday school of the First Congregational church will observe the ninety-third anniversary of its organization with appropriate exercises tomorrow evening.

CONTRACTOR FOR GRAND TRUNK IS UNDECIDED

WEBSTER, Mass.—William P. McLean, Philadelphia, treasurer of the Pinkerton Construction Company of Massachusetts, consulted with the company's attorney, Charles Haggerty, in Webster yesterday, to find some means of deciding whether the company will leave its machinery and tools in Webster, or abandon the contract.

No decision was reached in the matter and Mr. McLean left for New York.

Much business was transacted at the meeting of the sub-contractors and John Marsh at the Hotel Belmont, in New York, Wednesday, and Mr. Haggerty said: "John Marsh is doing everything in his power to come to an understanding with the contractors and the Southern New England railroad, so work can be continued on the Grand Trunk railroad."

BOSTON PLAYING PHILADELPHIA IN GRISCOM FINALS

Home Players Finish Morning Play at Individual Contests With Margin of 7 Points to Their Credit

MRS. R.H. BARLOW WINS

Boston met Philadelphia this morning in the individual matches of the final contest for the Griscom golf trophy on the links of the Brae Burn Country Club and won by a score of 11 to 4.

This afternoon six foursome matches are being played between the two teams but Boston has already won enough points to assure this city of getting the trophy.

Both cities are represented by very strong teams. Philadelphia offered the same individual lineup as was used against New York Thursday and which won from that city 12 matches to 3. With the exception of the substitution of Miss McDonald for Mrs. A. McGregor, the Boston lineup was the same as won 15 straight matches from New York yesterday morning.

Miss Margaret Curtis, the national champion, and Mrs. R. H. Barlow, the women's eastern golf champion, were the first to tee off and the most of the gallery followed this match expecting to see some fine golf. They were not disappointed in their expectations as both players showed some remarkable playing and the eighteenth hole found the match all even. At the nineteenth both players made two of the finest drives ever seen here, landing the balls on the green and halving the hole in 4. Mrs. Barlow then won the twentieth hole in 5 to Miss Curtis' 7, giving her the match. Their cards:

Mrs. Barlow, out 4, 5, 3, 4, 5, 4, 4-43.
Miss Curtis, out 5, 5, 5, 5, 5, 5, 5-48.
Mrs. Barlow, in 5, 5, 5, 5, 5, 5, 5-48-40.
Miss Curtis, in 6, 6, 6, 6, 6, 6, 6-54-40.
Mrs. Barlow, 4-5.
Miss Curtis, 4-7.

The third game of the St. Louis-Boston American series takes place at Fenway park this afternoon and a record crowd is expected to be on hand to witness the contest. Both teams are now playing a high grade of baseball and the two matches already played have been close and exciting until the very last with the margin of victory only one run.

Manager Stahl is especially anxious to take today's game in order that he may get his team well up in the standing before meeting the Athletics next week. He expects to pitch Ray Collins, the former University of Vermont star, with Carrigan again doing the catching. Collins is just now in fine form and should hold the St. Louis batsmen to but few hits.

Manager Stall will probably start Weiman, his star left-hander. Weiman is one of the tallest men in the American league and his record to date has been remarkably good considering it is his first experience at major league baseball. Agnew will again do the catching.

CRAM PITCHES WINNING GAME

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—R. Cram, Brown's second string pitcher, defeated Pennsylvania on Andrews field Friday before a large crowd, 6 to 1, the young pitcher allowing only two hits and striking out 13. Cram made a poor start. He walked the first three men to face him, but soon settled down and forced the next two men to hit easy flies and struck the third man out.

BOSTON DEFEATS ST. LOUIS, 7 TO 6

In a thirteen inning contest Friday, Boston defeated the St. Louis American team by the score of 7 to 6. The visitors secured a lead in the eighth, but timely hitting by the local batsmen tied the score in the ninth. Hall succeeded O'Brien in the ninth and allowed but four hits during the last five innings. In the final inning, after Hooper had been put out by Walsh, Yerkes and Speaker were passed, and the former scored the winning run on Lewis' single to center. The score:

ATHLETICS WIN IN THIRTEENTH

PHILADELPHIA—In the thirteenth inning of Friday's game Barry hit for two bases and Schang followed with a bunt, on which Kahler made a poor throw, which allowed Barry to score, and Philadelphia won from Cleveland, 2 to 1. In the first inning Walsh got a triple and Land made a poor throw to catch Walsh off third, which let in the first run. In the ninth, with two out and Johnston on third, Baker made a bad throw to first and the run that tied up the game scored. Mitchell and Bender both pitched good ball. The former was taken out of the game in the ninth to make room for a pinch hitter. Kahler, who took his place, also pitched cleverly. The score:

BOSTON WINS AGAIN

CINCINNATI—The Boston Nationals won the second straight game from Cincinnati Friday, defeating the home team by a score of 6 to 4. Boston took the lead in the first inning with four runs and was never headed. Ames, formerly of New York, started to pitch for Cincinnati but was driven from the box in the first inning. Packard taking his place and doing much better. Purdue pitched for the winners and did fairly effective work. Cincinnati's runs being scattered through four innings. Home runs by Myers and Mann figured prominently in the scoring. The victory moved Boston up to sixth place in the standing. The summary:

NEW YORK 3, PITTSBURGH 2

PITTSBURGH—Fred Clarke was back in the game Friday, but despite his presence in left field, New York took the second game of the series, 3 to 2. Fine work by the visitors' outfield saved Demaree on several occasions. Adams struck out seven men, but was hit hard. On 14 hits New York scored only three runs. The first of these came in the second inning, when Murray doubled and Meyers singled. Merkle's double and Murray's single brought another in the fourth. In the ninth New York needed a run to win, and got it when Meyers doubled and Herzog, running for the Indian, scored when Snodgrass doubled to center. Pittsburgh got their two runs in the fourth when Wagner singled and Miller hit for a home run. Pittsburgh used Coleman, their new catcher, secured from Davenport in the Three I league. He threw out three men who tried to steal, and handled himself well for a recruit.

CHICAGO DEFEATS BROOKLYN

CHICAGO—Brooklyn played a poor game in the field Friday and errors, coupled with bunched hits, gave Chicago an 11-inning contest, 7 to 6, and also third place in the pennant race. The visitors bunched hits off Pierce in one inning, but throughout the game he pitched in fine form. Ragan became unsteady and was replaced by Stack, who had the bases filled in Chicago's ninth inning and Allen took the mound and retired the side on strike-outs. The finish resulted from a base on balls and an error by Allen. A single followed off Curtis and Leach scored the winning run. The score:

SHANKS MAKES PUT-OUT

WASHINGTON—Howard Shanks, Griffith's fast left fielder, has the distinction of making a put-out at the plate. Friday Weaver was surprised off third and the whole team came in to run him down. Shanks finally got the ball and speeding down the base-line overtook the Chicagoan a few feet from the plate.

TWO BIG GAMES SCHEDULED FOR COLLEGE NINES

Harvard Faces the University of Pennsylvania, While Yale Meets Cornell—Williams vs. Wesleyan

FELTON VS. IMLAY

COLLEGE GAMES TODAY
Harvard vs. Pennsylvania.
Yale vs. Cornell.
Brown vs. Holy Cross.
Amherst vs. Mass. A. C.
Oberlin vs. Ohio Wesleyan.
Bucknell vs. Ohio State.
Lafayette vs. Bucknell.
Williams vs. Wesleyan.
Manhattan vs. Albany.

Baseball among the large colleges and universities has now narrowed down to but a few games and today will find only two matches that have any bearing on the eastern championship title of 1913, although there are several other contests throughout the country where minor championship honors will be battled for.

With the University of Chicago already having won the Western Conference championship for the year and Leland Stanford, Jr., the lower Pacific coast championship, all that remains to be determined is which college will be awarded the eastern honors.

At the present time Yale has a long lead over all rivals and it will take some wonderful baseball on the part of Harvard to wrest the title from the New Haven university. The Eli nine meets Cornell this afternoon and it is expected that this will result in another battle royal. Yale has already won from Cornell, but not without a struggle and Coach Sharpe has done a whole lot of good work with the Ithaca team since then and today's contest is expected to be either's victory with Yale a slight favorite.

The other big match is the Harvard-University of Pennsylvania game at Soldiers field. Harvard won the game already played with this team at Philadelphia and the Crimson is especially anxious to repeat as it will then be in line to go against Yale without a defeat in any of her championship matches. Felton is expected to pitch against Captain Imlay again and if they are in the same form as they showed Decoration day, it will be a battle royal and low-score result.

Williams and Wesleyan will meet and this game means as much to these two colleges as a championship match. The keenest rivalry exists between them and today's game should be worthy of standing well up with the best these two colleges have played against each other.

MISS GREEN IS VICTOR OVER MISS WILDEY

Merion Cricket Club Player Defeats Plainfield Expert in Final Round of Tennis Championship

PHILADELPHIA—Miss Dorothy Green of the Merion Cricket Club defeated Miss Edna Wildey of Plainfield, N. J., Friday, in the final round of the women's national tennis championship in singles. The score was 6-2, 6-4. Miss Green will meet in the challenge round Miss Mary Brown of California, the title holder, for the championship today.

Both contestants played brilliantly, and it was only after a prolonged exchange of shots that Miss Green secured the points in her favor. Remarkable accuracy and steadiness finally enabled her to defeat Miss Wildey, who played the same rapid game she displayed in the state tournament when she was runner-up to Miss Brown.

Miss Green and Miss Wildey, who hold the state championship in doubles, will oppose Mrs. Robert Williams, the metropolitan champion, and Miss Mary Brown, national champion, in the final round of the doubles tomorrow.

In the doubles semi-finals round Mrs. Williams and Miss Brown defeated Miss Helen Alexander and Miss Dorothy Dixon, 6-1, 6-2, and Miss Green and Miss Wildey won from Mrs. Dixon and Mrs. Sands, 6-3, 6-4.

WASHINGTON CREW MAKES FINE SHOWING

Eight Rows Close to the Record, and Covers the Entire Four-Mile Course in 19m. 28s.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—Followers of intercollegiate rowing are today expressing considerable surprise over the showing made by the University of Washington crew in their time trial over the full four-mile course Friday afternoon in preparation for the intercollegiate regatta, June 21. According to the time announced by Hiram Conibear after the crew came into the float, they rowed the four miles of the lower course in 19m. 28s., which is within three quarters of a minute of the record, made under conditions that were almost ideal.

The Seattle crew covered the first mile in 4m. 30s., rowing a stroke that was 35 at the start, but which was quickly dropped to 28. The two miles they covered in 9m. 56s., the three in 14m. 51s., and the four in 19m. 28s. This is the best time that has been made over the course this year and is 22 seconds better than Pennsylvania made Thursday afternoon. The westerners rowed as high as 32 in the last half mile, but they did not appear to be extending themselves. The four had a trial this morning over the two-mile course, but Conibear would not announce the time.

James Rice started the day at Columbia by shaking up the varsity four, Sanborn and Lauber taking Peterson's and Naumer's places at No. 2 and No. 3 in the four. The new combination showed well, and Rice thinks he is about through making changes.

The University of Pennsylvania four had a trial up stream Friday night over the two-mile course and covered the distance in good time, according to Ellis Ward. He would not make public the actual time, however. In the morning the varsity and freshmen eights ran into a lot of rough water on a spin up the river, and as a result the Pennsylvania squad, with the exception of the four, had a lay-off in the afternoon.

The Wisconsin crews had a row up to Esopus island in the morning, giving them a total mileage for the day of 22. Glass, stroke of the Syracuse freshman eight, returned from Duluth and resumed his place in the boat. The crew went up stream and had a spin over the course despite the rough water.

WHITNEY MEETS WRIGHT TODAY

E. H. Whitney meets I. C. Wright this afternoon on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club in the final round of the Massachusetts state singles lawn tennis championship tournament of 1913 and the winner will play N. W. Niles, the present champion, in the challenge round Monday afternoon.

Wright won his way to the finals Friday by defeating R. C. Seaver in straight sets. At the same time Whitney defeated George T. Putnam 6-2, 6-3. There was more interest attached to the Wright-Seaver match than to the other semi-final. Wright, with but very little if any preliminary preparation, entered the meeting more to see if he could stick out a couple of matches than the idea of being winner. His match with Harris, however, indicated that he required very little speeding up, and thereupon he went into it like the Wright of old. His game against Seaver was along the same general line of attack as that which prevailed against Harris and Johnson. The summary:

MASSACHUSETTS SINGLES LAWN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP

E. H. Whitney defeated G. T. Putnam, 6-2, 6-3.
I. C. Wright defeated R. C. Seaver, 11-3, 6-1.

TABER SETS NEW RECORD

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Norman S. Taber, the Olympic runner, who will be graduated from Brown next week, added another new Brown record to the many he has made, by running an exhibition two miles, after the baseball game with Pennsylvania Friday afternoon. He made the distance in 9m. 31.2-5s., against the previous college record of 10m. 14.4-5s., made by D. T. Gallup in 1907. Taber set four new college marks for the mile and two for the half mile.

HARD PRACTISE FACES OARSMEN ON THAMES RIVER

Harvard and Yale Crews Will Get Some Strenuous Work for Today With Time Trial

NEW LONDON, Conn.—Harvard and Yale oarsmen are looking forward to two hard practise sessions on the Thames river today. This is the last Saturday of training before the big regatta next week and as tomorrow will be a day of rest, the coaches are going to put all the crews through some strenuous work.

There is little chance of any changes being made in any of the leading crews between now and the day of the race unless something unforeseen takes place. Gore has been out of the Yale varsity, but it is confidently expected that he will be back in his seat at bow of the varsity the first of the week. The freshmen eight appears to be going very satisfied and the varsity four is one of the best working crews on the river. Coach Gold will now devote most of his time to smoothing over the rough places and getting the stroke speeded up.

Coach Wray still has considerable work to do with his varsity eight. No changes are expected in the seating, as the present combination is doing the best work of the season. He is devoting much time to getting the boat to run smoothly between strokes and has made quite a little progress along this line. The freshmen eight appears to be at its best and the two varsity fours are still fighting it out for the honor of meeting Yale. It is doubtful if the final selection is made for this race until the day before the event.

The Yale oarsmen had two long drills Friday, one in the morning and one in the late afternoon. The coaches were well pleased with the showing made by the men.

The Harvard varsity and freshman eights had little work. A change was made in the shells used by these two crews and it took most of the day to change the riggings. Conditions being right, the varsity will be sent over the full course on time this evening.

VERMONT BEATS CORNELL 3 TO 1

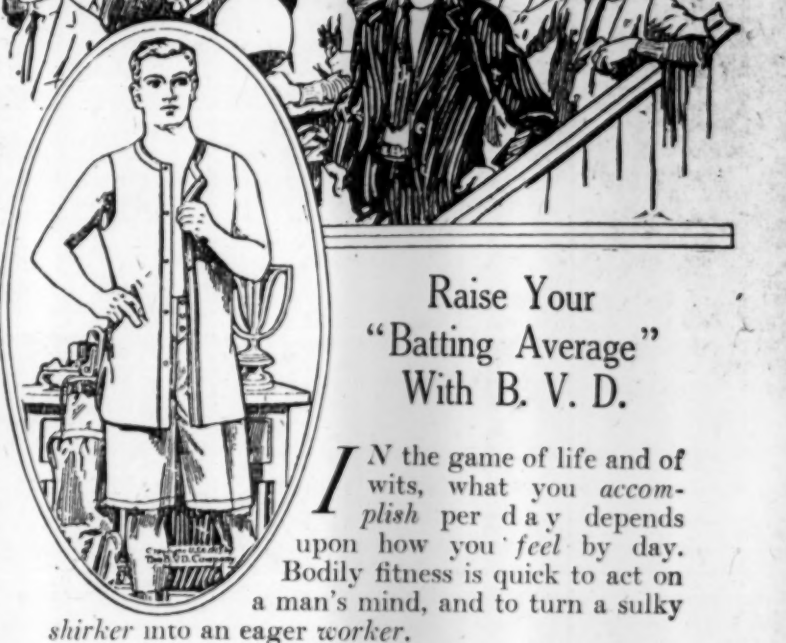

BURLINGTON, Vt.—Vermont defeated Cornell Friday, 3 to 1. Cornell led for five innings, but Edlund weakened in the sixth and passed Lennihan and hit Flaherty, both of whom were brought home on J. Berry's single. The score:

Innings: 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 R.H.E.

PALMS LINE VERA CRUZ STREETS

VERA CRUZ is the chief seaport of the Gulf of Mexico. Here in 1518 Grijalva landed and Cortez followed him the next year. Though not a good harbor the place retained its importance because of its nearness to the gold districts. Before the jetties were built the landing had to be made in small boats, for which there was an extra charge to each passenger of 50 cents when the sea was calm and $1 when the waves were running high and the landing was difficult.

America's Greatest Wood-Using Country

The first job of the earliest white settlers of America was to clear away the forests, to get the land free for cultivation. Trees were waste product. Vast regions were cleared of timber by fire and the ax. As late as the year 1840 forest products had no commercial value, and the attempts to make of wood growth in any form a marketable commodity yielded but a meager reward to labor, and nothing for the raw material. Nothing was so cheap as forest growth, no building material so available. The more that could be used for fuel, home building, barns, fence, road building, and structures of all kinds, the more easily and cheaply would the cultivated fields supplant the forest.

In this environment, says Harpers Weekly, Americans have grown accustomed to the use of wood as a building material, so that today, in the United States, the use of wood for fuel and building material is nearly ten times greater per capita than in any other civilized country. This free use of forest growth, still a nation-wide practice, is largely so because it is still cheaper and more available than other material. Within the past 20 years iron and steel have virtually supplanted lumber for heavy construction, and more recently concrete has displaced lumber to so large a degree that lumber is no longer indispensable.

Such an excursion and discovery made for himself added zest to the lad's study and prepared him to look for new difficulties to conquer by his own initiative. It is possible to make use of music in many points to further exactly such self-direction and to accustom the developing child-thought to finding out things for itself: a most useful accomplishment for his after experience, wherever he may attack some novel enterprise.

Mr. Flagler's Florida Investments $41,000,000

Henry M. Flagler's work in Florida was recently referred to as follows, says the New York Tribune: "It is to be doubted whether mere figures can give an adequate idea of the magnitude of Flagler's work. He has spent $41,000,000 in Florida—that is, his investment in incorporated enterprise amounts to that, divided roughly as follows: Eighteen million dollars in the old railroads, including the development of towns; $10, 000,000 in the Key West extension; $12,000,000 in hotels, and $1,000,000 in steamboat and outside enterprises. This sum does not include his charities, churches, and divers donations, for neither he nor any one else has kept the figures. The value of the taxable property in the counties exclusively reached by the Flagler roads has increased over $50,000,000 since he began. And there are today only about 25,000 acres under cultivation for fruit and vegetables out of a total of about 3,500,000 acres now available for such cultivation."

WEALTH SHOULD SERVE NOT RULE US

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD'S latest story, which has been coming out serially in Good Housekeeping, has for its theme modern wealth. Mrs. Ward's apparent conclusions are that those who dominate their possessions are blessed by them, for they share their gifts; those dominated by them or by the ambition to attain them, suffer from them. She sees that wealth in and of itself is too often a shackle on joy. Those who aspire to riches and sacrifice other things to grasp at them never really get the good out of money which may rightly be found if wealth is either incidental or so much a thing of habit that one does not notice it.

Which of us who has spent a few weeks or months in a home far beyond our usual walk in comfort and elegance does not discover how little the mere richness of the daily scene has to do with pleasure? At first, indeed, the attendance of deft servants at every turn seems almost an affront on one's dignity. Why should the maid meddle with one's belongings and assume to adjust the details of one's dress? It is an intrusion on one's privacy. But a few days find one content to accept the deferential doing of things by others which one is perfectly able to do for oneself. Yet this service alone does not make one happy. One may be as dissatisfied in a room kept immaculate by the hands of service as in one kept in order—or neglected—by oneself. If one has no more serious annoyance to contemplate one may indeed make a bugbear of bad table service or of none; but if one is prone to let such trifles bring distress one can find plenty of occasion in the most perfect menage. Many people accustomed to live in houses where wealth is writ large at every turn have lost the appreciation for such simple things as a bunch of delicate green plants gathered in a meadow walk along the brookside. To such a one a luncheon on the grass with one's table covered patterned with the moving shadows of the elm branches is not a pleasure but an annoyance. So this writer would warn against wealth which is in itself regarded as the sum and substance of human good.

THE TRUTH SHALL MAKE YOU FREE

WRITTEN FOR THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

THE great quest of the ages has been the search for truth, and the great hope of today lies in the fact that men are turning now as never before to seek for the truth in the right direction. They are coming first of all into an actual understanding of just what is meant by those two words—"the truth"—and beginning, therefore, to realize the profound significance of Jesus' promise: "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The truth has never been found and can never be learned through the testimony of the physical senses however real and insistent such testimony may seem to be. The truth, whether it be the truth about God, man or universe, is the eternal unchanging fact cognized by spiritual sense alone. It is that which always has been and always shall be; that which actually is now in spite of all material evidence to the contrary. It is found by reversing material evidence, by looking not at the things which are seen but at the things which are not seen, in other words, by turning the gaze steadfastly toward the imperishable realities of Spirit.

The eternal unchanging fact about God is this: "God is incorporeal, divine, supreme, infinite Mind, Spirit, Soul, Principle, Life, Truth, Love" (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, p. 465). Men have long hoped that this might be true, have instinctively felt that it ought to be true, and today they are coming to know that it is true. Losing their false concepts of Him whom they are finding a God who is God, a God whom they can consistently trust, honor and adore. If the truth about God is glorious, so also is the truth about man, for "man is the offspring of Spirit. The beautiful, good, and pure constitute his ancestry" (Science and Health, p. 63). This is the eternal unchanging fact about man, that which can be discerned by spiritual sense and demonstrated with scientific certainty. It is not something which men must vainly wish might be true; it is the truth itself.

Wonderful is the truth about God and the truth about man; wonderful, too, the truth about the universe which is created and governed by God and filled by Him with spiritual ideas. Being wholly spiritual it is subject to neither change nor decay but exists resplendent with a light and beauty that shall never pass away. The knowledge of the truth about God, man and the universe is a priceless possession because with this knowledge comes the fulfillment of the promise: "The truth shall make you free;" free not merely from the false concepts previously held as true, but free also from the disheartening results that follow in the wake of such false concepts: bondage to sin, disease, sorrow, poverty, pain, death.

To know that God is Truth is to know that God's promises will be fulfilled, to know that though the grass may wither and the flower decay, "the word of our God shall stand forever." The conviction that God's word shall stand forever transforms every Bible promise into a shining message of hope. "I am the Lord that healeth thee" is no longer merely a beautiful statement but is accepted as a vital practical fact, and "The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil" becomes a song of certain deliverance, for it is the promise of Him who is Truth. Thus it is that the knowledge that God is Truth sets one free from fear. Even so does the knowledge that God is Life and that God is Love bring set free from fear one begins to experience a very present salvation and to enter into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Knowing the truth about man and the

Mount of Olives

When first I saw true Beauty, and Thy joys Active as light, and calm without all noise. Shinn'd on my soul, I felt through all my powers Such a rich air of sweets, as evening shows' Fann'd by a gentle gale convey, and breathe On some parched bank, crown'd with a flowery wreath;

Colors, and myrrh and balm, in one rich flood O'erran my heart, and spirit'd my blood: My thoughts did swim in comforts and mine eye Confess'd the world did only paint and lie. I am so warm'd now by this glance on me That midst all storms I feel a ray of Thee. Thus feel by Thee, Who dost all beings nourish. My withered leaves again look green and flourish; I shine and shelter underneath Thy wing.

ANSWER TO YESTERDAY'S PICTURE PUZZLE

Frail.

Do acts of kindness to thy neighbor and never allow thyself to envy the happiness of another.—Tolstoi.

ODD LITTLE VILLAGE IN MANHATTAN

THERE is a little village in our town where a century or so ago a bellman cried his news, and everybody who was anybody at all had a pump in his back yard, just as everybody who is anybody today has a motor car, says a New York correspondent of the Bellman. There are alleys in this village, and streets that plainly were laid out by the home coming king: Macdougall alley, Minetta lane and Gansevoort street, through which geese were driven to market, and the old Bowery farm from which Van Twiller was ousted by the masterful Peter Stuyvesant. In this same village is a street called Fourth which crosses Tench, dashes along to Christopher, on to Charles and Perry, up to Thirteenth, when it suddenly ends its crooked career at Eighth avenue.

Everything is odd and queer and contrary to all New York rules and regulations in Greenwich village, and so the Village Improvement Society thought it would cap its uniqueness to anything New Yorkish by having an "Old Home Week." It welcomed home the villagers who are living all over Greater New York, and the pastors of the churches in the village made addresses, and there were parades, and every one in the village took tea, either at the social settlements or day nurseries or similar places.

There were dances for the young people, and illustrated lectures on the past and present glories of the village, and a children's pageant, and various other things which ended with an "Old Home Dinner" in the playground of the big public school. How foreign all this seems to everything else that is going on here at the same time, how strange it must have been to listen to the men and women reminiscing of the days when they were wee ones and the pigs as well as the lamplighters actually roamed about those streets! There were desperate efforts then to keep Greenwich Village "American," to keep the pleasant old houses with their charming doorways and gardens from being turned into city blocks, for previous to this time had not with old Trinity and laying the foundation of the vast fortune? Aaron Burr lived here at the place known as Richmond Hill; Washington and Adams both lived in the same house for a short time. Hamilton lived here and so did Tom Paine, and our earliest summer garden vaudeville show was established before the revolution on Lispenard's meadows.

Three Garnet States

A fine gem garnet may be worth from $5 to $25 a karat, according to variety and size, but it is not necessarily true that the owner of a garnet mine is a millionaire because his mine produces garnets by the ton. In fact, the bulk of the garnets produced are measured by the ton, but those of inferior quality are used for abrasive purposes. In 1912 the production of abrasive garnet, according to the United States geological survey, amounted to 4182 short tons, valued at $137,800, so that the average price for a ton of garnets was not quite $33, or considerably less than double the price of a ton of hay. The proportion of garnets in 1912 showed an increase of 106 tons in quantity and $16,052 in value compared with 1911. The three garnet-producing states are New York, New Hampshire and North Carolina. — Indianapolis News.

Early Printing on Clay

One of the most interesting discoveries of the excavation on the island of Crete was made in 1908. It was a disk of terra-cotta, the largest of those found with unknown hieroglyphs, and its peculiarity is that every one of the 241 signs has apparently been separately impressed on the clay, while it was soft, with a stamp or punch. It is thus, as the explorer, A. J. Evans remarks, really a printed inscription. The pottery with which it was found sets its date perhaps as far back as 1800 B. C., or 3700 years ago.

Cicero on Friendship

Friendship is nothing else than perfect agreement in all divine and human things, together with kindness and affection; and, wisdom, indeed being excepted, I am not sure that any better gift has been given to man.—Cicero.

IRIS IS FLOWER OF STATELY BEAUTY

THE iris is one of the most peculiar of flowers in structure. It has no true calyx and corolla, but the perianth, beautifully colored, may be regarded as consisting of three bearded sepals that curve sharply downward when the flower is in bloom, and three petals that stand upright and usually curve toward each other. The pistil is divided into three leaf-like extensions that commonly lie close to the bearded part of the leaves that we have here called sepals. Under this broad stigma (or end of the pistil) a single stamen lies close against the leafy stigma. In all the iris flowers there is velvet on the under petals (so-called sepals) but in some the velvet is heavier than in others, and of course deeper colored when heavier. The beard in most cases is yellow but sometimes it is pure white at the top, deepening to gold in the bottom of the flower cup.

The iris seems to have developed an endless variety under cultivation. There is the pure color that is almost blue, yet still is purple. There are flecks of white and the velvety lower petals deepen to lavender. Here is the royal-purple velvet, supporting a chalice of pure white. The golden flecks of the beard accentuate the color quality in every variety. Here are white ones, with only the gold fleck to lend color. Here is a combination of royal purple and yellow. Here is mauve and deep cream or coffee color, an exquisite symphony. Here again is mauve tinged almost to red or perhaps to dull old pink in tone. There is a kind that pales from gold to a warm brown or what the modiste would call taupe. The under petals are in this case a deep maroon streaked with white. Indeed this streaking of the lower petals lends delicate effects of added variation in these flowers. Sometimes the velvet petal is almost a solid color—purple or maroon or gold—but often it is thickly interwoven with white.

Standing in a tall vase, not too thickly massed, these flowers are as splendid as anything in the floral world. They will not bear crowding. A few are more lovely than many—unless one has large receptacles for them. The tall green stem is part of the beauty, and each flower is so splendid as to deserve individual respect. Hence one should never crowd the fleur de lys but set them in a royal group, so that the flowers are all plainly defined.

Business Man Satirized

An amusing bit of satire on what is called the myth of the overworked business man of the day is found in a current magazine which assures us, by direction, however, that when the business man of today goes out to luncheon with another man for the purpose of talking business he spends an hour and a half at the very least discussing what would have been settled in half an hour—and without luncheon—by the man of affairs of an earlier day. We are also permitted to infer that even the vaunted telephone is not so much of a time saver as is supposed, for every important transaction carried on over the telephone has to be put in writing after all. Even the time saver, stenography, is called in to question. The business man, so this writer has it, looks over the half dozen letters he has dictated, together with 20 more which some minor official has dictated in his name, and calls into requisition a bothersome card catalogue of facts, because so many vital blunders have crept into the letters in the process of being twice transcribed. Then they go back to be done over. Attention is also called to the fact that the business man formerly was at his office at 8 a. m. The overworked man of today gets in about 10 o'clock.

The Coal Baron

The coal baron is a person who owns large quantities of coal and deals them out to different persons, some of whom he has never met; he gets various prices for his coal, according to how well he knows the persons who may need it.

Sometimes he knows the president of a railroad very well, and as a favor, and just as a testimonial of his regard, he lets such a person have coal for two dollars a ton.

But when he sells his coal to a lady in the slums, to whom he has never been presented, he charges her eight dollars a ton for it. Sometimes he charges more than this, if he thinks the lady cannot be trusted.—"Life."

So there was nothing to do but to go to the wall, and to the wall I went, but there was a door there.—Evan Roberts.

Advice Always at Hand

The best advice of a friend is often wrong. Think of the great sums paid to lawyers . . . for advice. Think of the hours of waiting to see them, while God's advice is free and we can have it at any time. He will tell you what to do. Let no man ask if he prefers comfort or ease. He should only ask the Lord when he is willing to do battle. The answer may call for courage and sacrifice, it may involve a rearrangement of your life plans, but let no man ask the question who fears the answer. It may lead you into the missionary field, the ministry or a banking house, and possibly to go work with a pick and shovel. If it's God's call that ditches must be dug, it's honorable work. No task for God is too humble or too lofty. He will help us bear our burdens, and if we are weak He will make us strong.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

Into the Country in Summer

An increasing number of Boston people rather like in summer time to leave the conventions of city life and live in the country in a simple and primitive way. They like to prove to themselves that they have not been swamped by an "effete civilization." This trend is seen in the widespread resort to camp life for children in summer. Parents are beginning to suspect that boys and girls brought up to depend too much upon the refinements of a modern home for their comfort may lose the initiative that rises superior to circumstance. Surely it is just as well not to feel that one can only be happy when one's food is cooked to perfection and served with the last touch of the waiter's art! To make creature comforts and physical luxuries the test of one's happiness and progress is now seen by many people to be a lowering of the standard of the great men of the nineteenth century who adopted the Wordsworthian shibboleth about plain living.

The Business Situation

It is a coincidence of unusual significance that the Panama canal will be open for business about the same time that the new tariff law will be in operation. When the canal is finished many of the leading commercial seaports of the world will be brought thousands of miles nearer together. It will mean not only great advantage to the commerce of this country to bring its own great cities into closer proximity by the water route but there is not a country in the world that will not reap the benefit. Now that the tariff wall which has surrounded the industries of the United States for many years is to be demolished, this country needs to look beyond its own borders for trade. Manufacturers will be in sharp competition with those of other countries right here in America. They have hitherto paid little attention, comparatively, to trade-getting abroad. They have had all they could do to supply the demand at home. Other great manufacturing countries, particularly Germany, England and France, have successfully solicited business in other lands. The United States in recent years has greatly extended its business in foreign territory but is still far behind other competing countries in this respect. And the foreign field is fertile for American cultivation. American-made goods are well liked, as a rule, wherever they have been introduced and on the basis of merit will they stand well the test of competition. It has been pointed out frequently by American consuls and American travelers that as a general thing, where manufacturers of the United States have undertaken to do business abroad, they have done so in a very superficial way. The wants of consumers in other lands should be studied, better shipping methods employed, and a better system of credit provided.

There is no doubt that much of the present pessimism to be found in the United States is manufactured for the purpose of impressing Congress with the necessity of retaining duties on certain goods. Much literature has been sent through the mails in an effort to create sentiment in favor of certain industries. Endeavors of this kind have met with success, so far as bringing about a depressed feeling is concerned. It is a costly and probably futile way to go about the main purpose, for there already has been a shrinkage in volume of business and it is altogether likely that the administration will carry through its tariff revision program. Now, instead of looking down in the mouth, talking hard times, and doing nothing, if the business interests of this country would face the music, make up their minds to push for trade in other countries, not forgetting that there are 90,000,000 consumers in the United States whose demands must be met, they would have less cause eventually to denounce present conditions.

The Minnesota rate decision handed down this week by the United States supreme court was not to the liking of the railroad interests, the monetary situation is altogether unfavorable and there are other unsatisfactory conditions that have been much dwelt upon. But the clouds certainly have a silver lining. The great added wealth which this year's enormous crops will bring will probably do wonders toward improving things when pessimism and fear give way to a healthier view of the situation.

Abuse of Franking Privilege

For pecuniary and ethical reasons a halt should be cried to methods now employed by senators and by congressmen in their use of the franking privilege. Such methods were never contemplated when the right was conferred. The pecuniary reasons for a change have been set forth by recent heads of the postal department, notably by Postmaster-General Hitchcock. The ethical reasons loom out with clearer definition today in the light of testimony now being given in Washington by lobbyists who are passing under the probe of the Senate committee. The age of the custom by which the public pays the bills for free dispersion of literature favorable to the claims of persons and corporations combating legislation recommended by executive and by legislative representatives of the people, does not make it right. Nor is the situation altered by the fact that, with equal facility, literature supporting causes favored by the dominant party and by the administration may be franked.

Loading on the government costs that persons, corporations and political parties should assume, adds to that tendency toward state-aid and public doles which needs no accelerating impulse at the present time. Legislators conspicuous for complicity in extension of the franking privilege to include uses that are abuses should be challenged for their conduct and disciplined by their constituents. Resolute action by a minority of remonstrants in the House and Senate might lead to some wholesome regulation of a custom that has assumed the dimensions of a scandal, so extraordinary are the theories of some legislators as to what the government may be made to carry and to spread broadcast for them and for their constituents.

Banking and Peace

WHEN Director of the Mint Roberts talked to American bankers and Canadian officials assembled in Ottawa about the "banker as a man of peace," he found them in an unusually receptive mood. Conditions of the banking business brought about by the uprising in the Balkans and by the financial sequelae of the same made them listen approvingly to a man who had come to say that "you cannot burn up, confiscate or destroy capital anywhere that every nation in the civilized world does not suffer loss . . . wars are out of date when goodwill has become a commercial asset." Moreover, had they not read in their morning papers that very day that France had just served notice that her surplus wealth would not be loaned to make possible a Bulgarian-Servian war, since, in France, bankers and the government play the same game when occasion demands.

If reports do not err, the preacher of peace for property's sake had a warm welcome at the Ottawa gathering. Like the members of chambers of commerce in cities on both sides of the Pacific, bankers also are averse at the present time to anything that will turn racial distrust into a war which, in turn, means conversion of capital needed for commerce and for normal social pursuits into wasteful ends.

The mood that will bring bankers of New York state to hold an annual session in the Canadian capital is not one of ultra-nationalism, out of which has come so much past strife. Rather is it a token of the coming internationalism that makes of little account issues over which men have fought for centuries and puts in their place, as matters to be debated and contended for in the field of reason, the larger issues that are coterminous with the race. Man, as resident on a world constantly shrinking in size, is therefore forced as never before to find ways of living more harmoniously with fellow-man. Man, as a developer of wealth, now finds that he retains it most securely and most personally when cooperating rather than when competing with his kind, and that strife in any realm or among any tribes both directly and indirectly influences all other tribes.

Consequently upon the man who loans funds to enable fellow men to fight there falls an ever-increasing moral responsibility, whether the battle is waged as of yore by professional warriors or in the later but none the less destructive forms of combat over issues that are economic and not dynastic, national, religious or racial.

TODAY is "Flag Day," not by a decree of high authority imposing compliance upon a refractory people but by one of those popular patriotic movements of humble origin and large possibilities. The passing generation has witnessed a very decided increase of formal respect shown for all sites of historic significance and for all descendants of persons identified in any way with making the nation. What more natural than that, as part of this renaissance of reverence, there should come renewed interest in the national symbol, its history and its meaning?

Among children and youth who have come under the influence of the flag ritual that is now so generally used in the schools there is a decided feeling of homage when the colors go by in street parades or whenever the flag is hoisted and unfurled in their presence. Equally influential upon certain elements of the adult population has been the campaign of education carried on by the patriotic orders, such as Sons of the Revolution. But take the American urban crowd, by and large, and it is exceptionally indifferent to the presence and the meaning of the Stars and Stripes.

Consequently, use of the anniversary of the adoption of the flag, made by church, school and fraternal organization or by civic agencies, which helps foster an attitude of respect and of appreciation, is to be commended heartily. Fortunately recent legislation has suppressed perverted use of the flag for advertising purposes.

As part of the larger movement to induce, in a generation revolting from much that was traditional, a truer understanding of the place of symbol and of ritual in all normal human relations, this renewed emphasis on the flag and on respect for it formally expressed is doubly interesting. Pioneer settlers in the United States had had experiences in Europe which made them forswear much of the civic and ecclesiastical formalism and symbolism of the past. The exigencies of conquering a continent strengthened the national habit of putting content above form, meaning above style, and the deed above the manner of doing it. Consequently, as a people, Americans are not symbolists but realists. That of late years they have begun to understand better the legitimate place of idealism, symbolically expressed, is apparent in a variety of reactions from the ancient severity and traditional hostility. Saluting the flag is one of them.

SENATOR LA FOLLETTE'S announcement that his speech on the Underwood bill will take a week in delivery gives his audience opportunity to arrange other affairs so as not to be distracted from close attention. Mr. Webster answered Hayne all in one day, but it was not a tariff speech.

Americans as Seen by a Japanese

EVERY now and then we have it brought home to us that the quality denoted by the word "hustle," growing out of the energy and thrift characteristic of the American people, is to a large degree incomprehensible to the oriental, accustomed as he is to traditions and their effects which are in most part quite opposite. The gentleman visitor from Japan, for example, does not know how to explain many things he sees in the United States. Taken on a basis of his standards, they become inexplicable, while to trace their remote cause would involve a knowledge of the American and his history quite out of the ordinary visitor's range. The prosperous class of Americans who go away for so-called vacation periods, and continue to entertain and permit themselves to be entertained, without respite, is a class which the Japanese finds difficulty in comprehending. He fails to understand why servants are called "help" and why a servant, upon being given a tip, should say, "All right," in a way to indicate that servants condescend in permitting the tip to be given them.

Our Japanese visitor remarks with wonderment the habit of chewing gum, which prevails in America and he is inclined to attribute it to the demand of that same animus of hustle and energy, often called force, which he believes to be so characteristic of the American. But why such waste of motivity? The story is told that when Admiral Togo made his visit to the United States some three years ago he was shown New York subway. A brief sketch of the utilities of the system was given him and among other things it was explained that an express train between two given points saved three minutes more than a local train over the same distance. Whereupon, it is alleged, the Japanese admiral asked, with child-like simplicity, "And what do you do with the three minutes?" It was a pertinent question, too, whoever the querist.

The American regard for hustle, which has furnished the means of building up great institutions and bringing to light useful inventions, excites admiration of the Japanese and many others. But this admiration of the American's incessant disquiet is not untempered with amusement and pity. As a Japanese himself has put it, a rocking chair is a characteristic bit of furniture for a people who cannot keep quiet even when they mean to rest. Evidently, here is an opportunity for applying the conservation idea to a form of energy that is well worth conserving.

Flag Day

Preferential Voting Stands a Test

THAT enterprising laboratory of election experiments, the western United States, has supplied through the recent city election in Portland, Ore., a test of preferential voting which goes far to establish the merits claimed for it. Indeed it shows a working out of results that deserve the serious consideration of cities where government has not yet come to satisfactory form, a numerous class. Accepting the judgment of the newspapers of the city as correct, the use of the new device has brought about the submersion of the least worthy forces of city politics and the election of the best men to an extent that single voting would have failed to do. The merits of the men may not be judged across the continent but it is discoverable that the voting through several choices worked some marked results and that strong pressure for a majority failed beyond the first column to settle the issue. The citizen of any city or town can put politicians of his neighborhood in the place of the numerous candidates for the city commission of Portland and quite easily estimate how the similar working of the election would result.

It was Portland's next step after the adoption of the commission form of government, and the object of the election was the choice of four members to join with the mayor in complete replacing of the elaborate system of boards and departments that had grown up in the familiar fashion. There were fourteen candidates for the four places. The voters were permitted to express first, second and third choice and the vote for each candidate was determined by adding that given him in the three columns, each column having the same value. The table of returns shows a result very different from the vote of the first choice. The two candidates having the highest vote as first choice held their place in the totals and were elected; below that the effect of the cumulative voting was strongly marked. As first choice, one candidate had third place with a vote of 11,349 votes, more than 3000 beyond that of one other who was elected over him by the addition of the second and third choices. The successful one of these two gained a lead of 4000 in the second choice and a full 2000 more in the third, thus winning in the total by more than 3000.

What appears to have happened is that a candidate with a strong personal following of a kind familiar in city elections made a great showing in the first choice but failed to be considered at all desirable by the voters who were not in his train, and through the loss of second and third choice strength he failed of election. Beyond the third place at the outset, he fell to the fourteenth and lowest rank in both the second and third choice columns. The candidate who could not commend himself to any degree of favor outside his personal support failed of election, and it is easy to conclude that he was not desirable. That conclusion is supported by the personal estimate expressed in the Oregonian. It seems to be clearly established that the support that rallies about a candidate through some personal attractiveness or inducement meets correction in the pressure of a public opinion that would find no means of excluding him from the elected list through single voting.

Single tests do not finally prove the merit of a new device. They do not settle the impossibility of the politicians' devising a means of overcoming the handicap placed upon them. But so far as one trial could go in that direction, the Portland election has carried preferential voting towards demonstrated success. It seems to establish it as the means of removing one recognized evil in elections, the sweeping power of a personal following that defies the forces of good. Such an influence evidently cannot sweep through three columns.

FORMER SPEAKER CANNON does himself and his countrymen injustice by his prediction that if he were to write and publish his recollections of a long career in politics the same would not be purchased or read. No doubt it is true that, as compared with either French or British readers, Americans do not rate either autobiography or memoirs highly; and consequently American authors are not so prolific in the more personal and intimate forms of literature as their rivals beyond seas.

But once this admission is made for purposes of comparison as between large groups of differently trained nationals, the statement immediately must be qualified somewhat. From the days of Benjamin Franklin's autobiography to those of Booker Washington's graphic depiction of his climb up from slavery and Mary Antin's classic voicing of the meaning of America to the emigrant, there never has been a time when a sincere, human document about America has not been appreciated by Americans. But the typical American hitherto has been too objective in his life's ideals to write about his subjective experiences. To be and to do has seemed more important to him than the process of becoming or careful noting of the same with ultimate publicity as to the process. Numerous autobiographies are a sign of national age, not of national youth. There will be more of them in America from this time on; but Europe can never be overtaken and distanced, and this for obvious reasons.

As for the relative infrequency of recollections and memoirs coming from the American presses, that too is not surprising in the light of the national past. It was only the veto put upon his further action that drove the modest soldier, Grant, into writing his recollections. Pressure of official duties and pecuniary limitations, as well as lack of any deliberate design early formed, brought it to pass that the memoirs of United States Senator George F. Hoar lacked unity and completeness when published, and they will give to posterity a far from adequate conception of the man and his service to his time. Mr. Blaine's "Twenty Years in Congress" is by its very title partial. He had neither time nor inclination to bring the personal record up to date, that his view of Blaine, the presidential candidate, and Blaine, the diplomat, might be known.

When it happens that a man has the prescience to foresee that his recollections may be worth while, and plans accordingly, then it is that the book which finally comes enlightens the world. The case of John Bigelow is apropos. Senator Lodge has been equally careful in preservation of all correspondence and other requisite data; and Mr. Roosevelt already has begun to turn his memory back on pages of personal and party history in an illuminating way. For the ordinary American, however, life is still too brief and too strenuous and too much given to action, to make him a successful memoir writer.
